SYNOPSIS OF LOVE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY MIRON AND PHANIA.

I LOVE.

O happy thought! O blissful state!
What joys, what pleasures on thee wait:
Love's generous wine again I sip
From crimson cheek and nectared lip,
Love's genile tone my bosom thrills,
And with delight my being fills.

I LOVED.

I loved! Ah, me! the sweet refrain
Comes o'er my lonely heart again;
I grasped the rose, the petals fair
Were scattered on the sunny air;
The wine I tasted, but the glow
Left, and my heart was chill as snow.

I HAVE LOVED.

Yes, I have known what 'tis to feel
Love's soft enchantment o'er me steal—
The honeyed word, the soft caress,
That filled my life with happiness;
And through all time still sweet to me
The thought that I have loved will be.

I HAD LOVED.

I had loved—'twas a childish love—
All sweet and gentle things above
Myself, that seemed the soul to lift
To pure unselfishness; but gift
Supernal marked that thrilling day
That rare a wiser passion sway.

I SHALL LOVE.

I still shall love, though years shall shed
Their frosty honors o'er my head;
Though time shall furrow deep my brow,
I still shall love as I love now;
And in the happy home above,
There I shall ever, ever love.

I SHALL HAVE LOVED.

Thus do I hope, ere laid aside
Is love's tumultuous, conquering tide,
I shall have loved myself and race
So truly, that a resting-place
Of joy eternal shall be mine,
Where God is love and love's divine.

CHAPTER XX.

HESTER BERTRAM'S CHILD.

For nine days the life of the lovely Violet was despaired of.

The infant heiress had been taken charge of by the dumb nurse, who, by the advice of Miss Rowley, and the physicians, had carried it to her home in Stanford street.

Five long weeks passed, and Lady Ferdinand was out of all danger, slowly and surely recovering, and longing, with all a mother's love, to behold her darling baby, which, as yet, she had never seen.

Rowley had become her ladyship's sole nurse. There was no other hand, to Lady Violet, so soft as Rowley's; no other voice so low and sweet; no other tread so silent as it walked the floor. Whatever Rowley advised was right, and the young wife of Arthur Ferdinand submitted without a word.

"Oh, I am so much better to-day, Rowley," said Lady Ferdinand faintly, as she drew the tall, slim old maid to her side. "Come, sit by me, my tender nurse and friend," she added, smiling; "come and tell me all about my baby."

"My sweet lady," whispered Rowley, "it's as well taken care of as if I had the charge of it, for it is the dumb sister of—of my ——."

"Whom, Rowley?" asked her ladyship, seeing the old maid had paused in confusion.

After a few ahems and ahs, the blushing maiden of forty-seven suddenly burst forth:

"My intended, lady," and she covered her face with her hands and giggled.

"I don't believe it," said Lady Violet. "The idea of you getting married!"

"And why not, my lady?" in an offended tone.

"Oh, don't be angry, my Rowley, my friend, my mother! For what would Violet do without you? Wait till I am dead, and then get married. If he loves you, he will wait. I am sure I am not going to live long, Rowley—I feel it in my heart."

"Drive that from you, for tender-hearted Miss Rowland. She cried and sobbed, and pressed the little wife to her breast. Could she leave her for George Smith? No; she would live a miserable life if she deserted her young mistress.

"My darling mistress, be content; Rowley will never leave you while you live."

"Bless you, Rowley," Lady Ferdinand replied. "Yet I fear I am asking too great a sacrifice. I am not worthy of so much love from you. I have not, until of late, appreciated all your goodness."

"I think I've been very wicked ever to think of leaving you, my lady," answered the housekeeper. "Now, I shan't think of it any more, for I know you won't be able to see the baby to-morrow. Don't speak another word."

Obediently Lady Ferdinand laid down and allowed Miss Rowland to cover her, and to draw the satin curtains. For a while the nurse lounged in a large arm-chair and thought. Soon the regular breathing of the girl-mother told that she was peacefully sleeping. Rowley stepped slowly to a side-table, which was filled with writing-materials, and, after a pause and a heavy sigh, sat down and wrote the following letter:

"Dear Sam—Farewell to rhyming in this letter. I cannot leave my dear lady to come to you, so I send this by a bearer. My lady wishes to see the baby. You will be so kind as to send your poor dumb sister with the infant to-morrow morning. I am sorry you cannot make her consent to stay at the mansion, as I am sure, now my lady is so fast improving, she would prefer to have the child under her own eye, instead of that she was a mile away. I am very well cared for if away, but she is only a child herself, and longs for the baby as she would a doll; and it being her first-born, why, we must excuse it.

"My dear George, my lady is not willing to part with me while she lives; and she says, if you love me you will be willing to wait for me. Do not think your Rowland has changed, my heart is yours, while life lasts—but duty before love. My lady was left to my charge, and I cannot, after long reflection, leave her until she herself discharges me. What do you think, George, my life's heart-string, of this confession? Will you turn from me? Will you break your heart for Rowley's love? Or will you, like a faithful lover, wait till I am free to marry? Write me your decision, and believe me, while life lasts,

I am thy true love, ROWLEY.

She folded the letter, sealed it, and glided out of the apartment, bearing the letter with her.

In the dwelling-house in 24 Stanford street a man and a woman sat together on low stools. Two infants lay in the cradle before them, over which they were holding a whispering consultation.

"They look like twins," said the man.

The woman merely nodded her head. One was Hester Bertram's child—the child of Richard Harkaway; the other was that of Lady Ferdinand, and also Richard Harkaway's.

"Who could suspect that this infant is not Lady Ferdinand's babe, when the stamp of the father is upon it?" asked the man of the woman.

"Who would suspect they were not both of the same age?" said the woman to the man.

"But will not your child be known as a workhouse?" said the man, as he lifted Lady Violet's blue-eyed, golden-haired infant in his arms, and wrapped it, regardless of its pleading gaze, in a large dark shawl. With his hat in one hand, the infant in the other, he waited for the woman's reply.

"As you please," was the slow answer of the woman; and as the words issued from her lips the man's heart leaped with joy, for he fancied the voice trembled, and that some hidden emotion was swelling within her breast. Laying the infant upon the ounge, he clasped the woman to his breast, and pressed repeated kisses upon her lips. These kisses lightened the fate of the helpless babe of the lovely Violet.

Half an hour later, the man, bearing the child, stopped at a pretty cottage, and knocked gently at the door. The knock was almost immediately answered by a pleasant-looking woman, who, upon seeing him, invited him into the parlor, where a cheerful fire was burning.

"I have brought you the child, madam," he said, placing it in the lady's arms; "and I trust her to your care as to that of her own mother. I will pay you at every six months the amount we agreed upon, and I will now pay you for one year in advance."

The man drew out his purse, and counted the amount on the table in gold sovereigns.

"My dear sir," said the lady, who appeared to be a well-brought-up person, "I have no need of a year's money in advance, I assure you. There is too much goodness in your face for me to doubt your honesty."

"Nay, madam," replied the man, "you will oblige me by taking it; and allow me to state, at the same time, that I feel every confidence in leaving this infant under your care, feeling that you'll bring it up tenderly, for it is an orphan, and has no one but myself to care for it. I shall often call to see it, madam."

"I will be a mother to it, do not fear, sir," said the lady, kissing the infant. "Pray, tell me what I shall name her."

The man hesitated a moment, then answered:

"I will have Lillian, if you please, and add your own to it, if you will."

"With pleasure. We'll have her christened Lillian Bolton," said the kind-hearted woman.

The man departed in a cab. As it rattled over Waterloo Bridge, on its way back to Stanford street, the man inside thanks to Heaven that the woman had consented for him to do, as he pleased.

Lord Arthur Ferdinand and his wife were alone in her apartment on the morning when she expected the entrance of the dumb nurse bearing her baby.

Violet sat upon her husband's knee, gazing at him with her sweet, pale, wan face; and as she laughed something like the merry laugh of old, she said:

"O Arthur! what would my Guardy say if he could only see you nursing me just like a baby, and I the mother of a baby?"

"Well, he would say that you were the bigger baby of the two."

"Don't you long, Arthur, to see our child?"

"Certainly I do."

"Nurse Rowley went to see it at the dumb woman's house about two weeks ago, and she says it is the very image of you; but not a single hair has she that resembles me. Are you pleased at that?"

His lordship appeared delighted, and kissed his little wife almost rapturously, saying:

"Oh, I am once more so happy."

"Arthur, let the past bury the past, and let us only look forward to the bright and happy future!" exclaimed Lady Ferdinand. "Have we not another to love—our little daughter—for whose sake we both must make sacrifices, and for whose sake we must both live happily, loving and trusting each other so that our child will be drawn to both our hearts, and weave her worship above and around us?—that she may be to us our life-strings, our joy on earth."

Miss Rowland now entered hurriedly. The disturbed look upon her face at once filled Lord and Lady Vanderbuilt with alarm.

"What is the matter?"

"Oh, nothing, my lady—only a slight disappointment."

And the housekeeper sat down, and wiped the perspiration from her brow, with every appearance of having been very much excited. Taking a letter from her pocket, she said:

"I've just received this in answer to the letter I sent Miss Smith's brother last evening. He states that his sister is on a visit to Liverpool and has taken the child with her, and that it won't be possible for her to return until next Monday. She started yesterday, half an hour before my letter reached him; and if he only had it in time, it might have been prevented. At any rate, he has telegraphed to her, and assures me the baby is thriving beautifully, and looks more intelligent than infants generally do at five weeks old."

"She'll be six weeks old if we don't see her till Monday," said the disappointed wife, pouting her pretty mouth.

"Oh, it's only three days to Monday. Surely you are not going to grieve about it?" said his lordship.

"I am afraid she'll have something to grieve about when her ladyship learns that the baby is going to lose its good nurse," said Miss Rowland regretfully.

"O Rowley! do you mean it?"

"Yes, my lady. Her brother is going to Australia, and intends taking his dumb sister with him."

"What in the world takes him there, Rowley?" asked Lady Ferdinand, half suspecting the cause.

"Because—because—I wouldn't leave your ladyship, and—and—he can't bear to be in the same country—his—his heart is broken."

The good, yet foolish old maid burst into a most romantic sob, and rushed from the room, leaving the occupants to enjoy a hearty laugh at her expense.

The eventful Monday came, and with it the dumb nurse bearing her tiny charge. The physicians who had been present at its birth were there to receive it, and likewise assembled for that purpose were all the servants of the household. Lord Ferdinand was also there, the recipient of many congratulations. A beautiful child, it was pronounced.

"But it bears not the slightest resemblance to your ladyship. It is the image of your lordship," remarked one of the physicians. The servants echoed the last remark.

The dumb nurse never once raised her eyes. She was dressed in black. The bright yellow hair was almost plastered to the sides of her face with oil. A plain straw bonnet was fastened under her chin, and there was a black ruffled border inside her bonnet, which gave it the appearance of a cap.

"It looks far more intelligent than babies of her age. Come," the physician said, "allow me to place the little flower in your arms, my lord. See," he continued, "how her eyes are sparkling with delight. She is actually laughing. I never before saw so young a child so knowing."

The dumb nurse instantly began to write on the slate, at the physician's last remark. He took the slate from her hand. On it was written, in a large round hand:

"I never liked to see babies look older and more intelligent than their age. It's an ill omen!"

Lord Arthur started unconsciously as the words "ill omen" struck his ear. But Lady Violet and Miss Rowley laughed.

"That's merely superstition," replied the Doctor, handing back the slate to the nurse. She wrote again, and returned it to him.

"Superstition is worse than reality. Imagination drives people mad."

They all laughed at this. But there was a strange, hollow sound in the laugh of the master of Ferdinand, which did not pass unnoticed by the dumb nurse, who sat motionless, with her eyes cast down.

"I trust you are no prophetess, Miss Smith," said Lady Violet, uneasily, motioning to the physician to read the slate on which the nurse had rapidly written the answer, like one who foresaw the question.

The medical gentleman handed the slate to Lady Ferdinand, who read aloud:

"I do not believe in prophecy, any more than I would believe in the proverb which says 'The sins of the parents shall fall upon their children.'"

"Curse the woman!" said Lord Ferdinand in his heart. "Her words stab me." And as if he wished to put an end to the conversation, he laughed, and turning to Miss Rowley, who held the child, said:

"Come, give me my darling little daughter!"

The dumb nurse's heart beat loud and fast, and a close observer would have perceived at once the sudden paleness on her face and a trembling of the fallen eyelids, as if they longed to be raised, yet dared not. Miss Rowley placed the smiling babe in its father's arms. To the surprise and astonishment of all present, even the dumb nurse, the smiles upon the infant's face changed into a frown, as the father bent his head down to kiss it. A frightened shriek burst from the parted lips of the child. The hazel eyes, with their long lashes, expanded to their full capacity, staring with terror at Lord Ferdinand's face, as he looked down upon it, endeavoring in vain to hush its cries.

The dumb nurse arose as if from impulse, and advanced with dignified step to Lord Arthur Ferdinand, who still stood with the struggling child in his arms. She took the weeping infant, and staggered back to the low easy-chair on which she had been sitting. Hugging it to her breast like some frantic mother who had found her lost babe, she bent low over it, and sob after sob, smothered with the sound of kisses, could be heard from a bursting heart, as the dumb woman drew her long, dark cloak over the child and self, as if to hide both from the beholders, who gazed in sympathy without any attempt at interference, believing her conduct to be the result of the infant's fright.

Miss Rowley seemed to be on pins and needles. The physicians retired, and held converse together. Lady Ferdinand reclined, pale and weak, on the lounge, awaiting the result of the dumb woman's grief. Lord Arthur Ferdinand had retired to a back seat. His face was almost of a ghastly whiteness. The black circle beneath his eyes seemed to have grown blacker since he had entered his wife's boudoir, and his trembling hands shook like an aspen leaf. Lady Ferdinand had noticed it when he took the infant in his arms. The physicians also had perceived it, and wondered. Rowley, the most ignorant, yet most cunning, had never taken her eyes (when unperceived) off his lordship.

"There is something strange about him to-day," she said to herself.

The guilty lord was perfectly unconscious that an eye was upon him, or that he was the theme of the physicians as they talked quietly together. He bade Rowley bring in the nurse. The woman was near, and at a signal she housekeeper advanced into the boudoir. He turned to address the dumb nurse, but he saw only the form of the woman and child hidden by the cloak.

"My child! my child! my child!" the nurse inwardly breathed; "the hate thy mother bore thee is fading from her soul! Thou hatest thy father, and for that hate I love thee. 'Tis thy mother's blood that's in thy veins. Hate him—let the eyes of burning vengeance glare with thy mother's hate when he would take thee to his breast, and I will love thee!"

She threw the cloak off with a sudden fling, and once more placed the infant in his arms, but Rowley snatched it from him.

A shriek burst from the pale lips of Lord Arthur Ferdinand, as the eyes of the dumb nurse glared upon him with burning hate. The murderer gazed madly at her.

"Drive that woman from my sight!" he cried, recoiling with a look of horror upon his face. "There is a look in her eyes which maddens my brain and fills the room with blood. I tell you all I am not mad, but I see her before my eyes, there on the Broken Rock! I hear her voice, shrieking in my ears. I hear her laugh! I feel her hands around my neck! O God! I am suffocating, choking, dying! Mercy, Heaven! I am growing mad!"

And the stricken murderer fell senseless. Lady Ferdinand fainted; Rowley rushed out with the child in her arms, and rang for attendants. The physicians engaged themselves in endeavoring to restore the senseless lord.

The dumb nurse, to the bewilderment of all present, gazed scornfully around, and, pointing to the senseless form, upon whose face fear was depicted, she laughed loudly, triumphantly; then stopped, snapped her fingers over the body of the Lord of Ferdinand and spat upon him, and defiantly laughed and looked back, as her shadow disappeared in the distance.

CHAPTER XXI.

LADY VANDERBUILT'S TRIUMPH.

A year has passed.

For the purpose of introducing his wife to the beau monde, Lord Vanderbuilt had caused to be erected, in the most prominent square in the great city of London, a gorgeous palace, almost equaling that of the Queen herself; and to-night the Spanish bride of the Earl of Chester is to make her debut in the aristocratic world of fashion.

Thrilled at the thought of the preparations in her honor, thrilled as she foresaw princes, dukes and lords kneeling at her feet, thrilled as the thought of Thomas Harkaway's idolatry rushed before her, thrilled at her triumph over Lord Arthur Ferdinand—whom she could make obey by a single glance of her sparkling eyes or a smile of her luscious lips, whom she could drive mad by a word or a look—thrilled with savage gratitude that her child hated its father, thrilled at the sweet thought of how her vengeance was working, and thrilled, most of all, at the knowledge of how many hearts it was in her power to break, Lady Vanderbuilt, now in her palace, stood before a mirror, admiring her wondrous beauty, enhanced a thousand fold by the use of the magic powder.

On this eventful night another is before a mirror, It is Lady Violet. But how different are the thoughts of the two who are separated by a wall!

As Lady Violet's maids complete her toilet, Miss Rowland enters the apartment with a message to the effect that Lord Ferdinand desires to see her ladyship in the drawing-room. With a heightened pink upon her cheek, she looked to-day more like the lovely Violet of old, as she repaired to the apartment where her husband, with extended arms, awaited her.

"Oh, don't touch me, Arthur, or you'll crush all my grand dress."

But the pretty lips were invitingly pouted for a welcome kiss, and she assumed various positions calculated to display her dress and figure to the best advantage, before she expressed his opinion as to whether or not "she looked fit to tread the velvet carpets of Lady Vanderbuilt's new palace."

"I never before saw you look so lovely, Violet. You remind me of the day on which we first met, and I feel proud of you." And, drawing her towards him, he caressed her as if she were a child. "But, my darling, I fear you can never outshine Lady Vanderbuilt."

"Oh, I never expected to. I only wish to please you," replied the innocent, unsuspicious little wife, as she looked lovingly upon him.

"Well, then, you please me greatly to-night."

"And I trust Lady Vanderbuilt's self-love will be gratified by the presence of mind, and remained, with a throbbing heart and a calm exterior, to greet them.

"Oh! I'm afraid she'll have something to grieve about when her ladyship learns that the baby is going to lose its good nurse," said Miss Rowland regretfully.

"O Rowley! do you mean it?"

"Yes, my lady. Her brother is going to Australia, and intends taking his dumb sister with him."

"Superstition is worse than reality. Imagination drives people mad."

They all laughed at this. But there was a strange, hollow sound in the laugh of the master of Ferdinand, which did not pass unnoticed by the dumb nurse, who sat motionless, with her eyes cast down.

"I trust you are no prophetess, Miss Smith," said Lady Violet, uneasily, motioning to the physician to read the slate on which the nurse had rapidly written the answer, like one who foresaw the question.

The medical gentleman handed the slate to Lady Ferdinand, who read aloud:

"I do not believe in prophecy, any more than I would believe in the proverb which says 'The sins of the parents shall fall upon their children.'"

"Curse the woman!" said Lord Ferdinand in his heart. "Her words stab me." And as if he wished to put an end to the conversation, he laughed, and turning to Miss Rowley, who held the child, said:

"Come, give me my darling little daughter!"

The dumb nurse's heart beat loud and fast, and a close observer would have perceived at once the sudden paleness on her face and a trembling of the fallen eyelids, as if they longed to be raised, yet dared not. Miss Rowley placed the smiling babe in its father's arms. To the surprise and astonishment of all present, even the dumb nurse, the smiles upon the infant's face changed into a frown, as the father bent his head down to kiss it. A frightened shriek burst from the parted lips of the child. The hazel eyes, with their long lashes, expanded to their full capacity, staring with terror at Lord Ferdinand's face, as he looked down upon it, endeavoring in vain to hush its cries.

The dumb nurse arose as if from impulse, and advanced with dignified step to Lord Arthur Ferdinand, who still stood with the struggling child in his arms. She took the weeping infant, and staggered back to the low easy-chair on which she had been sitting. Hugging it to her breast like some frantic mother who had found her lost babe, she bent low over it, and sob after sob, smothered with the sound of kisses, could be heard from a bursting heart, as the dumb woman drew her long, dark cloak over the child and self, as if to hide both from the beholders, who gazed in sympathy without any attempt at interference, believing her conduct to be the result of the infant's fright.

Miss Rowley seemed to be on pins and needles. The physicians retired, and held converse together. Lady Ferdinand reclined, pale and weak, on the lounge, awaiting the result of the dumb woman's grief. Lord Arthur Ferdinand had retired to a back seat. His face was almost of a ghastly whiteness. The black circle beneath his eyes seemed to have grown blacker since he had entered his wife's boudoir, and his trembling hands shook like an aspen leaf. Lady Ferdinand had noticed it when he took the infant in his arms. The physicians also had perceived it, and wondered. Rowley, the most ignorant, yet most cunning, had never taken her eyes (when unperceived) off his lordship.

"There is something strange about him to-day," she said to herself.

The guilty lord was perfectly unconscious that an eye was upon him, or that he was the theme of the physicians as they talked quietly together. He bade Rowley bring in the nurse. The woman was near, and at a signal she housekeeper advanced into the boudoir. He turned to address the dumb nurse, but he saw only the form of the woman and child hidden by the cloak.

"My child! my child! my child!" the nurse inwardly breathed; "the hate thy mother bore thee is fading from her soul! Thou hatest thy father, and for that hate I love thee. 'Tis thy mother's blood that's in thy veins. Hate him—let the eyes of burning vengeance glare with thy mother's hate when he would take thee to his breast, and I will love thee!"

She threw the cloak off with a sudden fling, and once more placed the infant in his arms, but Rowley snatched it from him.

A shriek burst from the pale lips of Lord Arthur Ferdinand, as the eyes of the dumb nurse glared upon him with burning hate. The murderer gazed madly at her.

"Drive that woman from my sight!" he cried, recoiling with a look of horror upon his face. "There is a look in her eyes which maddens my brain and fills the room with blood. I tell you all I am not mad, but I see her before my eyes, there on the Broken Rock! I hear her voice, shrieking in my ears. I hear her laugh! I feel her hands around my neck! O God! I am suffocating, choking, dying! Mercy, Heaven! I am growing mad!"

And the stricken murderer fell senseless. Lady Ferdinand fainted; Rowley rushed out with the child in her arms, and rang for attendants. The physicians engaged themselves in endeavoring to restore the senseless lord.

The dumb nurse, to the bewilderment of all present, gazed scornfully around, and, pointing to the senseless form, upon whose face fear was depicted, she laughed loudly, triumphantly; then stopped, snapped her fingers over the body of the Lord of Ferdinand and spat upon him, and defiantly laughed and looked back, as her shadow disappeared in the distance.

CHAPTER XXI.

LADY VANDERBUILT'S TRIUMPH.

A year has passed.

For the purpose of introducing his wife to the beau monde, Lord Vanderbuilt had caused to be erected, in the most prominent square in the great city of London, a gorgeous palace, almost equaling that of the Queen herself; and to-night the Spanish bride of the Earl of Chester is to make her debut in the aristocratic world of fashion.

Thrilled at the thought of the preparations in her honor, thrilled as she foresaw princes, dukes and lords kneeling at her feet, thrilled as the thought of Thomas Harkaway's idolatry rushed before her, thrilled at her triumph over Lord Arthur Ferdinand—whom she could make obey by a single glance of her sparkling eyes or a smile of her luscious lips, whom she could drive mad by a word or a look—thrilled with savage gratitude that her child hated its father, thrilled at the sweet thought of how her vengeance was working, and thrilled, most of all, at the knowledge of how many hearts it was in her power to break, Lady Vanderbuilt, now in her palace, stood before a mirror, admiring her wondrous beauty, enhanced a thousand fold by the use of the magic powder.

On this eventful night another is before a mirror. It is Lady Violet. But how different are the thoughts of the two who are separated by a wall!

As Lady Violet's maids complete her toilet, Miss Rowland enters the apartment with a message to the effect that Lord Ferdinand desires to see her ladyship in the drawing-room. With a heightened pink upon her cheek, she looked to-day more like the lovely Violet of old, as she repaired to the apartment where her husband, with extended arms, awaited her.

"Oh, don't touch me, Arthur, or you'll crush all my grand dress."

But the pretty lips were invitingly pouted for a welcome kiss, and she assumed various positions calculated to display her dress and figure to the best advantage, before she expressed his opinion as to whether or not "she looked fit to tread the velvet carpets of Lady Vanderbuilt's new palace."

"I never before saw you look so lovely, Violet. You remind me of the day on which we first met, and I feel proud of you." And, drawing her towards him, he caressed her as if she were a child. "But, my darling, I fear you can never outshine Lady Vanderbuilt."

"Oh, I never expected to. I only wish to please you," replied the innocent, unsuspicious little wife, as she looked lovingly upon him.

"Well, then, you please me greatly to-night."

"And I trust Lady Vanderbuilt's self-love will be gratified by the presence of mind, and remained, with a throbbing heart and a calm exterior, to greet them.

"Oh! I'm afraid she'll have something to grieve about when her ladyship learns that the baby is going to lose its good nurse," said Miss Rowland regretfully.

"O Rowley! do you mean it?"

"Yes, my lady. Her brother is going to Australia, and intends taking his dumb sister with him."

"What in the world takes him there, Rowley?" asked Lady Ferdinand, half suspecting the cause.

"Because—because—I wouldn't leave your ladyship, and—and—he can't bear to be in the same country—his—his heart is broken."

The good, yet foolish old maid burst into a most romantic sob, and rushed from the room, leaving the occupants to enjoy a hearty laugh at her expense.

The eventful Monday came, and with it the dumb nurse bearing her tiny charge. The physicians who had been present at its birth were there to receive it, and likewise assembled for that purpose were all the servants of the household. Lord Ferdinand was also there, the recipient of many congratulations. A beautiful child, it was pronounced.

"But it bears not the slightest resemblance to your ladyship. It is the image of your lordship," remarked one of the physicians. The servants echoed the last remark.

The dumb nurse never once raised her eyes. She was dressed in black. The bright yellow hair was almost plastered to the sides of her face with oil. A plain straw bonnet was fastened under her chin, and there was a black ruffled border inside her bonnet, which gave it the appearance of a cap.

"It looks far more intelligent than babies of her age. Come," the physician said, "allow me to place the little flower in your arms, my lord. See," he continued, "how her eyes are sparkling with delight. She is actually laughing. I never before saw so young a child so knowing."

The dumb nurse instantly began to write on the slate, at the physician's last remark. He took the slate from her hand. On it was written, in a large round hand:

"I never liked to see babies look older and more intelligent than their age. It's an ill omen!"

Lord Arthur started unconsciously as the words "ill omen" struck his ear. But Lady Violet and Miss Rowley laughed.

"That's merely superstition," replied the Doctor, handing back the slate to the nurse. She wrote again, and returned it to him.

"Superstition is worse than reality. Imagination drives people mad."

They all laughed at this. But there was a strange, hollow sound in the laugh of the master of Ferdinand, which did not pass unnoticed by the dumb nurse, who sat motionless, with her eyes cast down.

"I trust you are no prophetess, Miss Smith," said Lady Violet, uneasily, motioning to the physician to read the slate on which the nurse had rapidly written the answer, like one who foresaw the question.

The medical gentleman handed the slate to Lady Ferdinand, who read aloud:

"I do not believe in prophecy, any more than I would believe in the proverb which says 'The sins of the parents shall fall upon their children.'"

"Curse the woman!" said Lord Ferdinand in his heart. "Her words stab me." And as if he wished to put an end to the conversation, he laughed, and turning to Miss Rowley, who held the child, said:

"Come, give me my darling little daughter!"

The dumb nurse's heart beat loud and fast, and a close observer would have perceived at once the sudden paleness on her face and a trembling of the fallen eyelids, as if they longed to be

NEW YORK CLIPPER.

SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1875.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information must send a stamp for reply, as answers by mail.

NO SIGNATURE.—1. Auction pitch, eleven points up, fourhanded. A, C and D are ten apiece, and B (the seller) nine. C bids one, and D bids two, which B takes. A makes low. B makes nothing, C makes Jack, and D makes high-game. Who loses the game? 2. Two gentlemen, one of whom has lost sixty cents' worth of beverages, and the other seventy-five cents' worth, sit down to play off their indebtedness, being represented by two checks, respectively marked 60 and 75. Has the gentleman holding the 60 check to add fifteen cents to equalize both?.....1. C, who made Jack, is the Dealer. A going out on his low, while D, having made the two he gave, takes precedence in going out, by virtue of his high. D had not to make two before C—he had simply to make two in order to count anything. As he made those two, he could not have made three. 2. Neither.

J. W., Chicago.—"I would like to have your decision on a baseball game between the Whites and Reds of St. Louis. The Whites would beat the Reds 2 to 1 in 2 innings; then the Whites would go to bat; the Reds 4 in 1. Now, the score stood 1s-to 0 in favor of the Whites."..... This is singled out as covering the cases of "N. P.," "Short Stop," "M. A." and "M. Gordon," all of St. Louis. The difficulty is as to attaching a value to cipher. Our present opinion is that a score of 1 to 0 is at the rate of 2 to 1; and that therefore J. McN. wins; but we shall decline to establish such a precedent by rendering a positive decision, until the case has been more generally discussed. Let some of our mathematicians and commercial accountants present their views. Meantime, as this may require some weeks, we suggest that it would perhaps be satisfactory to all parties to draw these bets.

CONSTANT READER, Attleboro.—John Lees has been dead many years. He was the tutor of George and William Hanlon. Three of the Hanlon Brothers came to this country two years or more before they successfully performed under James M. Nixon's management, at Niblo's Garden. They traveled with Howes' Circus as the Lees Brothers, but were not considered a success. At the close of that tenting season they returned to England, and began practicing new acts. Subsequently they returned under engagement to Mr. Nixon, as above stated, and were then known for the first time as the Hanlon Brothers. They were four in number—Thomas, George, William and Alfred. Some time thereafter the Reids, two apprentices named Edward and Frederick.

LOUIS ALEXANDRE, Cambridgeport, Mass.—This correspondent sends us a poem entitled "Destiny." It seems to be the destiny of Louis Alexandre to be a literary pilferer and plagiarist, if nothing worse. A few weeks ago he sent us "One Year Ago," dedicated to Malvina ——. That poem he stole. It was written by the late Samuel Bowles, Isaacs Menken, and may be found in her book of published poems, "Infelicia." This Alexandre the great fraud has made a few trifling alterations in the fourth and seventh verses. Thus ignominiously ends the brief history of the Cambridgeport poet Louis Alexandre.

E. S., Louisville.—There can be no claim of foul for playing from outside the ground. The batter must be persistent in so doing after having been warned. The reason of this rule is that it is almost useless to make such a claim, as, in nineteen cases out of twenty, be impossible for him to render a positive decision either one way or the other. The rule is ample in providing that one can so play except through the neglect of his antagonists.

P. W. A., London.—1. The qualifications of an applicant for admission at West Point cadetship are as follows, and substantially the same will apply to the Naval Academy: Age between 17 and 22 (but those who served at least one year in the late war are eligible up to 24), height five feet, free from disease or of weakening, wasting, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography, and the history of the United States. 2. Cannot, we believe, appoint a non-resident of his district.

O. B. D., Peterboro.—1. Either employ a dramatic agent or negotiate with managers in person. 2. If you have no professional reputation, take any salary that may be offered. The chance to appear before the public and test your abilities is worth more to you than salary. That branch of the profession is overcrowded. 3. About $50 and $150 per week, respectively.

OLD STAGER, Springfield.—Any of those periods, except the twenty-fifth and fiftieth, which are respectively silver and golden, is just about what the married couple are pleased to call "old." Tin is the wooden, iron, paper, crockmache and other weddings, according to the fancy of the people who are looking for presents. The silver and golden are also established and unchangeable.

JOHN G. PHILLIPS, Brooklyn.—Inquire at the various banks yourself. 2. None at present. 3. No authentic information upon that point, the distance being unusual. 4. Hayward and Barlow are engaged at the Academy of Music. Mr. Barlow is St. Louis Lorillard. 5. To do so would require more space than we can spare. 6. The selling of mutual pools is not legalized in this State.

J. Y. Z., St. Louis.—There is such a rule, and it allows a man to substitute a player in any inning for any player who is disabled by actual illness or injury. For instance, in the eighth inning of a championship game, Allison was struck in the face and had to retire, and Harbidge took his place, though the latter had not played in the game before.

RYAN.—1. A game is on the fourth inning, and one club goes in on the fifth, and is blanked. The club having the last inning then goes in, and makes one. Before the fifth inning is completed, rain is heavy enough to stop the game (on account of rain, say). Is it a game? Does the club having the last inning win, or do they have to go back to the last inning (fourth)?..... It is no game.

D. R. F., Reiser, Boston.—Such feet must not be off the ground at the same time—that is, the toe of one foot must not leave the ground till the heel of the other touches it. Walk with the head erect, the shoulders thrown back, and the knees straight. It would be advisable to secure the services of a teacher who has a thorough practical knowledge of the art.

J. H. T., Jersey.—1. "A man on third base, with two men out; ball batted to the field, and man from third base goes home and calls tally before ball is caught by fielder on fly. Does it count a tally? Same position, and third baseman reaches home before ball reaches first, and batter out."..... The run does not count in either case, as the striker was put out.

READER OF CLIPPER.—Sexton's run was not 1,500, but 462 in a game of 1,500. The amateur's performance is of no account, not having occurred in a public match. From three to five thousand have frequently been run by amateurs in the same way. Nevertheless, there is no higher run on record than 1,483.

A. AND B., St. Louis.—A loses. The St. Louis had to win in two innings, there having been no provision for a tie. Our rule is that a tie must be played to more exactly what he says, when his language is plain; and we depart from it only as to dead heats between horses, which are provided for by a special and published rule of the turf.

INQUIRER.—Such a game would be void. We should do that, provided his ball had not ceased rolling, and B would have to play at the balls as he found them. But in the three-ball game, under the exceptional rules governing "the championship of the world"—but under no other rules—B could have the balls replaced.

WINDSOR.—The colors of jockeys are not recorded in this paper. Write John Chamberlin, Saratoga, inquiring what True Blue was ridden under on say July 29, 1873, at Saratoga. The gentleman's regular color is white, spotted with red; and probably that was mounted by a red cap, was the color on the day you refer to.

YADRUTAS, Philadelphia.—1. A dye is the only thing which will do it. 2. There are twelve dramatic theatres in this city. 3. The actors and actresses of all are several places for benefits, and has fulfilled engagements at Fox's old American Theatre, now the Grand Central. 6. About $100 per week. 7. There is none.

C. J. C.—The lady is mistaken. The actress referred to is a member of a well-known theatrical family, and has been on the stage since infancy, and was never in Australia.

H. S.—The best of competitors are liable to make mistakes, wanting correct proofs; hence we were made to say in our past issue that Mark Smith died in Paris, France, Aug. 15, 1865, when it should have read 1874.

C. N. G., Jersey City.—1. Apply to the assistant advertising agent, and as no gain or experience you will find it easier to get higher positions. Business management can only be learned by passing through the other stages.

SHARPSHOOTER, St. Louis.—1. If you think you have talent, make a trial. Go to one of the managers in your city, and state your wishes frankly, and solicit an engagement to do whatever may be required of you. 2. Yes.

O. CHARLES SCHMIDT, Boston.—1. Ned O'Baldwin's height, in his stocking feet, is 5ft. 8½in. 2. Joe Coburn and Jim Mace fought a draw at Bay St. Louis, Miss., Nov. 30, 1871, twelve rounds being contested in 2 hours and 30 minutes.

COMMONWEALTH, Boston.—1. March 20, 1800, was in the eighteenth century. 2. You are at liberty to bet on a certainty, provided you do not fraudulently conceal your knowledge.

WELTON, Chicago.—1. A loses. A score of 1 to 0 is clearly not at the rate of 4 to 1, though Kinay with some reason has quoted that 2 to 0 is. 2. 17 to 1 is a far greater defeat than 4 to 0.

J. A., Washington.—1. We have not heard of the writer for some time. Frank Converse is living in Jersey City. Do not know about Quinn and Enders. 2. J. A. is not performing in variety theatres.

SUB, Buffalo.—1. You can get the information by writing to the Police Board, 300 Mulberry street, New York. 2. There is no direct line of steamships from Buffalo to Liverpool. Take the trains.

CONSTANT READER, Newport.—1, 2. Next to Yale, Harvard is the best way. There is but one safe answer to 3. We cannot come on yourself. Commission a friend to buy for you.

J. P. W. & Co.—There are thirty drummers attached to the Seventh Regiment, three to each company. 2. The band numbers forty-eight pieces, inclusive of bass drum and cymbals.

J. M. T.—1. $18.60. 2. The best plan would be to rent some theatre for a few weeks during the Summer season, and, if they achieve success, other engagements in the metropolis will follow.

T.—There is a man on 3d base; he attempts to steal home; but, seeing which, the pitcher makes a balk, and then throws the ball to catcher, who puts the man out. Is he rightfully out?..... No.

JOHN B. HARKER, Pittsburg.—"Shell" is the proper name, but it can be either a single-scull, double-scull, pair-oared, four-oared, or six-oared shell.

A. L. MARCH, Manchester.—1. The pitcher can be changed each inning if necessary. 2. The Baseball Guide, by De Witt, 33 Rose street. 3. The rule is the same as it was last year.

LOW BOY, La Cross.—If that was said, and we do not think it was, it was because the statement read that 2 had turned up the jack. Jack turned up counts before anything else.

S. L.—No, Miss Laura Keene produced "Hunted Down" at Lina Edwin's Theatre in this city Jan. 25, 1871. Frank Mordaunt acted John Leigh, and continued to do so until the engagement closed on March 4.

W. M. G., Springfield.—In his battle with Rose he scaled 140lb., which is, we believe, the lightest weight at which he has fought.

D. J., Toledo.—L We cannot give his present whereabouts. He was recently traveling with Cal Wagner's minstrels.

E. L., London.—No answers by mail. Most of the professional aeronauts are engaged traveling with circuses. An advertisement might secure you one.

C. B. M., Trenton.—1. Trustee trotted twenty miles in 59:35½ on the Union Course, L. I., Oct. 20, 1848. 2. No answers by mail.

W. S. HAYNIE, Chicago.—It has been so represented, but we doubt whether there was any money up in stakes. Under the circumstances the bet should be drawn.

TAC TOMPKINS, Des Moines.—C. B. Elliott, Greenpoint, L. I. 2. John Kyle, foot of 132d street, Harlem River, New York.

CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.—Johnny Grady and Billy Kelly fought 140 rounds in 3 hours and 18 minutes, for $200, near Bull's Ferry, N. J., May 7, 1867. The battle was drawn.

W. E. T., Buffalo.—The best running jump on record is that made by Jack Howard, 29ft. 7in., which has never been equaled.

DECLINED.—"Drinking Lager," "I am Waiting for Thee," "Civil Rights," "Black, Black," "The Wonderful Trial," "Without Money," and "The Lost Adeli."

M. K.—1. You have made a statement, but have asked no question. 2. Spades count at once for the purpose of calling out, and so escape and everything else.

G. W. M. S.—1. It is customary, among good players, to bar an assistance at euchre. 2. No rule is necessary. An agreement will suffice.

ARLINGTON, Mount Vernon.—The Athletics, having been awarded the pennant in 1871, flew it during the season of 1872; but the Reds were awarded it in Nov., 1872.

E. C., Dixon.—Cannot say. Most probably the meaning is only known to the writer of the advertisement and the person whose attention it is intended to attract.

W. H. A.—It is a title by courtesy. In certain portions of the West nearly everyone is saluted as Judge, General, or Colonel.

SUMARI.—1. The par value of the National Chemical Bank shares was $100, and they are now worth about $1,000. 2. Donation Day will be observed on Saturday, May 29.

H. DIXON, St. Joseph.—You are correct. We discovered it last week. Thank you for calling our attention to it. "We are waiting."

DIXIE, Louisville.—If they are published, any musicdealer can procure it for you, even if he does not have it on hand.

C. B. F., Eastport.—1. There is no record. 2. He is considered a good leading actor, and holds a high rank in his profession in England.

H. A., Brooklyn.—1. You had better apply personally to the manager, as it enables him to judge concerning your personal appearance, etc. 2. From $8 to $12 per week.

MRS. E. C. R., Woodstock, Va.—Address "U. N. Soper & Co., advertising agents, N. Y. City." They publish a list of such.

BENNETT, Philadelphia.—The late James Unsworth was born in Liverpool, Eng., July 2, 1835, and died in that city Feb. 21 last.

BASEBALL, New Haven.—"I bet that the Mutuals would beat the New Havens in two innings. Do I have to take the first two innings?" You take any two innings.

R. H. S., Brooklyn.—We have no time to tinker with puzzles. You can buy that in almost any toy-store, and with instructions.

AGENT.—Your question is too ambiguous. Do you want to know when it was last acted in this city or this country?

GEO. B. W., Boston.—In print the lines would not please you.

W. F. C., Boston.—A letter addressed in our care might find him.

E. B., Cobbleskill.—We cannot supply you with any of those dates.

BROWN, Syracuse.—He is an American, and was born in St. Louis, Mo.

C. S.—Probably because he received an offer of a larger salary to perform elsewhere.

B., Worcester Square.—We keep no record of the composers of songs. See any published copy.

SUBSCRIBER, Pittsburg.—The three brothers Welling and J. W. Freeth.

W. H. G., Corning.—She was born in Chicago, Ill., in 1852, and is not married. Address as agent.

W. J. S., Corning.—James Robinson claims that title, but there has been no contest of late years to decide it.

G. E., Philadelphia.—They are performing in London, Eng.

PUGNICKER.—The alleged cause is adultery, and the exposure caused a great scandal in England at the time.

DOUBTER, Jersey City.—The Roman Catholic Cathedral now building in this city fronts on Fifth avenue.

T. E. S. B., Baltimore.—The Government has put its foot down against any further expeditions to the Black Hills.

C. H. D., Oxford, O. A. Russell.—The lowest pays, which is any throwing-off.

B. F. B., Phila.—The dimensions of A. T. Stewart's store are 192ft. 10in. square on its 3 fronts room, corner of State and Madison streets..... In St. Louis baseball has superseded billiards temporarily, as was the case in Cincinnati after the first trip of the famous Red Stockings. Herman P. The Deane Brothers of Brooklyn intend to convert their private room into a school of billiards for both ladies and gentlemen .....Among the entries for A. R. Samuells' one-armed tournament is Col. Egolf of Troy. There will be two prizes—a championship emblem and a silver tea-set. ....Frederic Croke Jr. has just returned from a month's tour, covering St. Louis, Cleveland, Chicago and Cincinnati. ....A touching incident of a professional's late visit to this city. Three invalids, each with the hoar of antiquity thick upon him, stood braced against a long counter in an open house in Fourteenth street, nearly opposite Irving place. They were Frederic Grote Sr., Dudley Kavanagh and Philip Tieman, a triune that had certainly not been together since the Spring of 1871, and perhaps not since the Fall of 1864. Despite the tremor in his limbs, there was a look of stern resolution on the face of one as he returned to his pocket a physician's prescription and called for soda water; the muscles of the face of the second worked painfully, suggesting that a qualm had fallen upon his diaphragm, as he ventured to ask for seltzer; while the third looked sheepish, not to say ineffably contemptible, as between lengthened pauses he verbally petitioned for "A—kleiner—beer—very small." They drank their exhilarating fluids in perfect silence, but looked suggestively at one another, each as if he would be pleased to see some healthy man carry him to the door and deposit him in a hearse. One has for years had a limb that is unreliable; another has a right arm and hand that are useless except when some impecunious customer asks him to "chalk it up on the slate" at 210 and 212 Vine street, Cincinnati; while the remainder of the party is also a trifle disfigured, albeit still in the ivory ring. Without a word, the trio put their sound limbs together, thus equalizing themselves, so to speak, and then, forming in funeral procession, with the pallbearers open carriage at the orthodox distance in advance of the orthodox covered one, and an improvised band from Steinway's playing "Silver Threads Among the Gold" as a dead march, they moved off slowly and feebly to plant themselves in a private cemetery less than seventy feet distant. Arrived an hour later, the Rev. Frederic Grote, as was his privilege by virtue of seniority, read from the Book of Common Prayer the mortuary service. It was touchingly brief: "It is but a few years since we three—were more violent in our drinks!" That was all; but entire columns of agate would but inadequately reflect the memories those few words recall. And then these three old friends—feeble for many years, but absolutely murdered in an unguarded hour of soda, seltzer, and pony beer—crawled into the trench, and Steinway's band filed out, playing a lively air..... An amateur in Oskaloosa, Ia., has just made a run of 1,800 at the four-ball game. A "Reader," who asks "Who can beat this for an amateur?" will please see "Reader of CLIPPER" in Correspondents' Column. The Eagle of Brooklyn reports that Col. McLean of the Fourteenth Regiment will take part in the contemplated tournament in that city..... The Sunday Mercury of Philadelphia announces that A. P. Rudolphe and Maurice Daly, "the latter of whom has not been in that city since the first tournament held in Sansom-street Hall," are to give an exhibition at the rooms of the Union League on the night of May 20 on a new table of H. W. Collender's manufacture having been ordered for the occasion. Maurice was in Philadelphia in 1868. At the time referred to by The Mercury, he was a boy less than fifteen years old, and, as he was then working at 83 Nassau street, it is not likely that he was in Philadelphia. We can not remember, however, that he has ever given an exhibition there, although he may have done so. Victor Estebe's old room, corner of Eighth and Chestnut; and our contemporary is correct in saying that the members of the Union League are entitled to much praise for bringing this young American player to the front. Convalescing. Joseph Gerstel has withdrawn from Taylor & Estephe's room, Philadelphia, and is again, we learn, in this city. Long Joe Martin was buried in Spring-garden street, Phila., last week, "setting up" tables for lady amateurs in private houses..... Peter D. Braisted Jr., late proprietor of the Seventh Regiment Rooms, has a French table for sale. It was made by young Bassford, now of Chicago. Harry Eaton of Easton, Pa., has come to grief. Unless he can raise the wherewithal on the northeast corner of Broadway and Tenth street, this ex-Californian was to have taken the 4 P. M. train on May 17 for the coal regions. James Kernan is not in St. Louis at present, and was in Cincinnati last week. Dodds of Pittsburg, assisted in his practice games by J. H. Davis, is averaging all the way from six to eight in scores of 200 and 500. This will be interesting news to Reisinger. Spencer & Gasper are to open a room on Wood street, that city, with three tables, to be devoted exclusively to pinpool.

THE RING.

PRIZE BATTLE IN NEVADA.
Jim Chatham Squares Accounts with Bing Williams.

The match made several months ago between those specimen bricks of the pugilistic brotherhood in Nevada, Jim Chatham, a Cornishman, and William, alias Bing Williams, a Welshman, was decided in a twenty-four-foot ring near Virginia City, May 4, resulting in the success of Chatham, who was slightly the favorite in the betting. It will be remembered that these men fought once previously—on August 24, 1872—when Williams came off first best, after fighting 45 rounds in 3 hours and 10 minutes, the stakes amounting to $2,000. It was a bitter pill for the Cornishman to swallow, and as soon as he was properly recovered he sent for another go to sought a fresh match with his conqueror, who wasn't averse to such a job, and articles were speedily signed for a second meeting on turf. The feeling between the friends of the principals ran high, and the desire was so great to be in at the death that several thousands of persons made the trip to the battle-ground, some five miles out from Virginia, on the road to Dead Man's Point. The ring was erected in an inclosure about eighty feet square, surrounded by a board fence a dozen feet or so in height. Few were disposed to pay the tariff of $2.50, imposed for admission to this inclosure, preferring to hold on to their money and look out for a chance to see the show for nix, which they succeeded in doing, as the pressure brought to bear upon the fence from without caused it to topple over before the milling began. Chatham was the first to shy his head-gear into the hempen circle, being accompanied by Tom Daley and his brother Joe. His weight was stated to be 175lb, which is thirty pounds more than was pulled down by Williams, who was waited upon by Jim Trevillian. Chatham's colors were red and green—the same sported by Williams, purple and white. The latter won the toss for choice of corners, and of course took that which placed the Cornishman with his face to the sun; after which he crossed to his antagonist's side of the ring, and, holding up a three-hundred-dollar roll of greenbacks, offered to bet that amount on the result of the mill, but failed to secure a wager. Louie La Page was agreed upon for referee, and at 10:05 A. M. "Time!" was called and the combatants advanced for which is thus reported in the Virginia Evening Chronicle:

ROUND 1. Rapid sparring, each seemingly eager to commence the real work of the day. Chatham opens the ball by sending in a rifle-shot on the body. Williams giving change on the headpiece, when they clinch and go down side by side.

2. After a few quick exchanges Jim seizes Bing around the neck, and manages to get several good hits on the ribs, finally gaining the first fall, but not until he has received some pepper on the dial. Blood drawn by both—a stand-off.

3. Williams comes up smiling, and hits Chatham a heavy blow on the side of the head, receiving in return a stunner in the ribs. Williams thrown heavily.

4. No heavy blows were received, and, after some sparring, Williams went under, still confident and smiling.

5. After some sparring, Chatham gets in a solid lick just on Williams' broad chest, and threw the latter.

7. Williams gets in two rib-roasters, knocking Jim against the ropes, whence he falls to the ground, bleeding considerably; Bing on top.

7. To put an end to tedious sparring, and at the same time get out of harm's way, Williams dropped.

8. Give-and-take was the order, a series of punishing exchanges ending by the Welshman throwing Chatham.

9. No heavy blows, and Chatham goes down, with Bing on top. Chatham loses the most blood and breathes heavily. Williams feels fresh.

10. Good sparring. Chatham gets a heavy blow on the side of the head. He clinches with Williams, and is thrown.

11. The best round yet. Chatham gets the worst punishment, but forges Williams against the ropes, and the latter goes down to escape cruel. Chatham's eyes look heavy.

12. Jim forces the fighting; gets in two or three rib roasters, grabs Williams round the back, and throws him.

13. Both men come to the scratch, and Chatham grabbed by Williams after some heavy blows, and thrown.

14. Lively sparring. Williams gets it in the side and neck, and is thrown over the ropes, Chatham on top, Jim badly cut about the head.

15. Chatham delivers some hard hits on the body, and throws Williams.

16. Williams leads on Chatham's forehead; they clinch, and Jim smilingly throws him in his corner.

17. Williams is thrown.

18. Chatham gets Williams' head in chancery, and throws him heavily, amid cheers.

19. Chatham hits Williams in the left eye, and throws him against the ropes in his own corner. The fight is finally thrown.

20. This was a repetition of the last round, with very heavy blows, Chatham being thrown.

21. This was characterized by fancy sparring, the contestants being slow and sure. Williams fails to get in a blow, Chatham dancing and Williams smiling. Jim receives several heavy blows, but manages to get in one on Bing's throat, knocking him into his corner. First knock-down for Chatham.

22. Slow and sure. Chatham dancing, but looking very disconsolate, and Williams smiling, and a broad smile overspreading it. Chatham clinches, and they go down together.

23. Chatham's head like a piece of liver, especially about the eyes. Much feinting. Williams dodges Jim's blows, and gets in one on his eye. Much sparring. Bing aims a blow which Chatham dodges, playing to get in his right and duke. Williams is thrown against the ropes, and both fall back in the ring.

24. Both up smiling. Chatham's smile is very sickly. Williams feints to quick on his forehead, gets in blow on Jim's head. They then clinch, and both go down together.

25. Chatham's left eye is closing up. Williams calls on him to "sail in," and lands a heavy blow on Jim's breast. Chatham tries to get in one on Williams' bread-basket, but don't succeed, though he gets Bing in chancery. Cries of "Break his neck." Williams is finally thrown.

26. Nothing of particular interest occurred in this round.

27. Williams, whose body shows signs of punishment, is thrown in his own corner. Chatham strikes at him while over the ropes, amid cries of "Foul."

28. Slow and cautious. Chatham thrown.

29. A repetition of last. Chatham's right eye closing. Williams thrown over the ropes.

30. Williams goes in on Chatham's heavy body-blows, and goes down to escape punishment.

31. Very slow sparring and much useless feinting after some time together. Chatham got in a blow which knocked Bing down.

32. Chatham came up smiling, and after some sparring got down to his work, giving Williams some terrible blows on the ribs. He caught Bing by the neck and held him for a half minute, while cries of foul came from all sides. Williams, in the meantime, did some good execution on Chatham's ribs. Getting loose from Jim, he was knocked over the ropes, and down.

33. Both men came up smiling in a weakly sort of way. Some little fibbing took place, and Williams was thrown.

34, 35. These were but repetitions of the former round. Williams evidently allowing himself to be thrown to escape punishment.

36. Hard sparring: hammer-and-tongs blows, and Williams finally flung over the ropes, and nearly outside the ring.

37. Chatham forces the fighting, creeping over into Williams' corner. Good sparring and considerable fighting in the middle of the ring.

38. Give and take, and Williams goes down to escape punishment. Chatham, for the last five rounds, has been gaining confidence. The cut under his right eye spurts blood at every blow he receives.

39. This was a very exciting round. Williams, after some very severe fighting, was knocked over the ropes in his own corner. Chatham stood over him and rained blows down on his back, amid cries of foul. Finally Bing fell to the ground, much punished.

40 to 46 were not interesting. Both men had ceased to display any science, and it was now a trial of pluck and endurance. Williams went down frequently to escape punishment, amid hisses and groans from Chatham's friends.

47. Chatham was forcing the fight, and it was done now in Williams' corner, who was knocked down.

48 and 49. Hard fighting, and Chatham down in each.

50. Williams much blown and discouraged; Chatham confident and stronger. Both down together.

51. Much hard fighting, and Williams goes down, amid cries of foul. Not allowed.

52. Fighting all around the ring; Williams thrown, Chatham falling heavily upon him.

53. More hard fighting. They clinch, and Williams is seen to insert his teeth in Chatham's left arm. Cries of foul, which was allowed by the referee. The fight from first to last was most contested, though Williams played cunning to escape punishment. His face is comparatively uninjured, though he has received some bruises on the body. Chatham's face is somewhat cut up. At the conclusion of the fight he was carried on the arms of his admiring friends to a barouche in waiting. He was followed by Williams, and both were in town half an hour after the fight. Several impromptu fights took place, and at one time a man sitting under the ropes was accused by Chatham of kicking at him as he fell, near the side of the ring. The Cornishmen were anxious to hang the fellow, although he protested his innocence of any such intent. Considering the circumstances attending the battle, much better order was preserved than was expected. The time required was about one hour and twelve minutes.

FRED SMITH will be the recipient of a testimonial benefit at the Centennial Hall, northwest corner of Twelfth and Callowhill streets, Philadelphia, on Monday evening, May 24. A number of good names are on the bills, and in the wind-up Steve Taylor will stand before Fred.

THE CHARITY BENEFIT.—The benefit gotten up for the family of the late Dan Kerrigan, and which took place in Geoghegan's hall, in the Bowery, on Tuesday evening, May 4, was, we are pleased to state, a complete success, the good-sized room being packed. Many of the old-timers were there, and, had it not been for the trouble of getting to the stage, a greater number of first-class boxers would have put on the gloves, as all seemed willing to do anything in their power to help along a good work. As it was, however, the show was first-rate, and the closing box of the evening—that between Pete Croker (who has certainly improved much within the past six months) and his present side-partner, Larry Powers—afforded great satisfaction to the lookers-on. They are a good pair to travel double. The others who set-to were Mike Noonan and Johnny Saunders, George Macarty and Tommy Churchill, Eddy Hanley and Pete Maginnis, and Gillen and Cogan. Songs were sung by Joe Drew and Messrs. Mulry and Curtain, Young Connelly danced a jig, and Shaw the contortionist gave a pleasing exhibition. Uncle Tovee managed affairs, and so great was the labor entailed by the position that he was pretty nearly played out at the finish.

JIM MURRAY has opened another sparring school at Noonan's, Ninth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia.

UNCLE BILL TOVEE'S BENEFIT comes off at Harry Hill's Variety Theatre, this city, on Thursday afternoon, May 20, and numerous special attractions have been provided, in addition to the long series of boxing matches between prominent men of this and other cities. A great feature will be the set-to between the veteran beneficiary and Prof. Judd, which in itself will be well worth the dollar greenback asked for admission. Don't fail to take it in.

GEORGE SILER AND BILLY MADDEN, a pair of as pretty sparrers as one could wish to look at, have secured Harry Hill's Variety Theatre for Thursday afternoon, May 27, when they promise to give "a show as is a show." Upon this occasion, as an extra attraction, they will put up the belt they won at this establishment some months ago, to be sparred for by members of the light-weight division.

THOMAS MCGUIRE—one of the old-time sports of the Fourteenth Ward, has just assumed the proprietorship of No. 4 Spring street.

THE WIFE of Alec Keene died at her residence, the Victoria Tavern, Kilburn, London, Eng., a few days ago.

WE HAVE LETTERS for Johnny Aaron, Geo. Siler, Geo. Ogden and Patsey Hogan.

AQUATIC.

REGATTA AT NEW ORLEANS.

The third annual regatta of the St. John Rowing Club on the Crescent City was held on Bayou St. John on Thursday afternoon, May 6. The pleasant memories which clustered around the previous boating carnivals of this pet organization of the Creole State, and the anticipation of rare sport, impelled an immense throng of people, among them many ladies, to seek the shores of the bayou, upon which, opposite the terminus of the Bayou-road and Esplanade-street cars, is located the handsome and commodious boat-house of the club, which was gayly and tastefully decorated, internally and externally. The opening race was for single-scull shells, in heats, for the championship of the club. There was one mile, with a turn. The first heat R. H. Mitchell won successful over Robt. S. Day, whose boat capsized; time, 8:54. The second was won by R. G. Musgrove, in 9:42½, defeating B. Tremoulet. The final heat and the race were also won by Musgrove, his time being 8:57. The second race was between two pair-oared shells, manned respectively by George H. Dunbar and C. L. De Fuentes of the St. John Club, and Joseph H. Bayhi and Thos. F. Clark of the Pelican Club. Benj. Bridges and Ad. Hebbler ballasted the boats by officiating as coxswains. At the turning-point, three quarters of a mile away, the Pelicans, who were leading by a length and a half, took the wrong direction, and thereby fouled the St. Johners, whose boat was badly damaged in the stern. The Pelicans came home a long way ahead in 12:40½, and were given the race, the St. John crew declining to claim foul. A four-oared-gig race between the same clubs followed, the course being three miles with a turn, and the opposing crews as under:

St. John—Henry Denegre (bow), John Glynn Jr., Paul Robelot, John J. Haydel (stroke), Benj. Bridges (coxswain).

Pelican—L. Keirn (bow), Paul Chaudet, Thos. A. Madden, John Connolly (stroke), Ad. Hebbler, coxswain.

An excellent start was had, and the racing was close and exciting until the boats neared the turning stake, when a collision occurred; and after the boats returned to the starting-point, with the Pelicans about three hundred yards in advance, the St. John men claimed foul, and the matter was taken under advisement by the judges. Time, 23:05. A mile scrub race, between fours made up of members of the St. John Club, concluded the racing, which in all was won by C. E. Bateson's crew, defeating that stroked by Thos. Toby. Time, 8:54. Music, feasting and dancing in the club-house brought the festivities to a close, and sent the guests of the club home rejoicing. Referee, Gen. Fred N. Ogden. Judges, B. M. Harrod and Samuel Boyd. Timers, F. O. Minor and H. Bonnabel. Starter, F. W. Baker.

HARVARD SCRATCH RACES.

On Saturday afternoon, May 8, the annual scratch races of the Harvard boatmen took place on the Charles River, Boston, the course lying between the Brighton bridges, and being one mile in length with a turn. The first race was for single sculls, Wiley of the class of '77 and James of the scientific school having entered. Just before the start James concluded not to pull, and F. A. Plaisted, a professional, took his place. Plaisted took the lead and won by half a length, after a close contest. The next was a pair-oared race, the first boat pulled by Otis of the scientific school and Hall '76, against Loring '78 and James S. S., the latter drawing the inside position, the Otis boat winning by a length. The third contest was for six-oared boats, there being four entries, as follows: 1st crew—Denton, S. S., stroke; Wetmore, '75, 2d; Irving, S. S., 3d; Warden, '78, 4th; Gould, '76, 5th; Appleton, '75, bow. Second crew—Riggs, '76, stroke; W. Bacon, '77, 2d; Bancroft, '78, 3d; Wells, '75, 4th; Loring, '78, 5th; Morgan, '78, bow. Third crew—Martin, '77, stroke; Hall, '76, 2d; Fay, '78, 3d; H. L. Harden, '74, 4th; Thayer, S. S., 5th; Green, '76, bow. Fourth crew—Weld, '76, stroke; Hastings, '75, 2d; Bolan, '76, 3d; Brett, '77, 4th; Meeks, '76, bow. The boats came home in the following order: Appleton crew, 1st; Riggs crew, 2d; Weld, 3d; Martin, 4th. The fourth race was between double-scull shells, of which there were two entries—Wiley, '77, and Willy, '75, against Mudge and Belmont of the class of '74. The start was excellent, but there was a foul, and as the hour was late the race was not pulled. The last race was a four-oared one, and there were four entries: 1st—McMillan, '74, Livermore, '75, Leeds, '77, Mudy, '74; 2d—Brown, '76, Danforth, '77, Hall, '76, Page, '77; 3d—Slade, '78, Warren, '75, Wells, '78, Isham, '75; 4th—Roberts, '76; Ellis, '75, Brett, '77, Kittredge, '76. The boats, about a length apart, came to the stake in the following order: Weld, 1st; Slade, 2d; McMillan, 3d; Roberts in rear.

WILL ANYBODY SWIM JOHNSON?

It turns out that the reported acceptance by Clarke of New Orleans, La., of the swimming challenge issued by B. Johnson was a canard, and as the latter gentleman up all hope of doing business in that quarter, he now sends forth another defiant blast, which will be treated in the same manner as before. Johnson is a good swimmer, but this he has not accepted within a reasonable period then Johnson will be justified in claiming the title of champion of America:

NEW YORK, May 17, 1875.

EDITOR CLIPPER—DEAR SIR—I am quite astonished at the fact of not having received any reply whatever to my challenge to all professional swimmers of America, certainly would have liked to have had a match previous to my departure for Europe; and in consequence of having received no answer, I can but believe that my claim to the title of champion swimmer of both Europe and America now clearly concedes. I wish to state, further, that if there is a swimmer in America who would like to swim me a match, I will wager $5,000 against $2,500, that I will be finally thrown. to make a match, I will at once take my departure. Respectfully yours, J. B. JOHNSON.

Champion Swimmer of the World.

THE GRAND HAVEN and Spring Lake, Mich., regatta has been postponed until August 10, 11.

THE YACHTING SEASON at Philadelphia, Pa., was inaugurated May 10 by a race between the boats of the Delaware River Yacht Club, ranging in size from 30 to 26 feet. The competing craft were the Adelphia, Captain John Rutter; W. B. R. Selby, Captain James Wheeland; John P. Slaven, Captain Collins; Fashion, Captain Wm. Harper; Orion, Captain John Harper; Sappho, Capt. Wm. Middleton; W. H. Bailey, Capt. Kelly. The wind was high and the water rough, and, being unable to withstand the combination, the Sappho was swamped and the Slaven capsized shortly after the start. The Adelphia won the Selby second, and the Fashion third, the latter being but seven minutes behind the winner. The Bailey witadrew on the homestretch. On the same day the Tilden defeated the Jacob C. Daubman in a race for $100.

A FOUR-OARED SHELL-RACE between heavy and light weight members of the Undine Club of Philadelphia came off over the usual mile-and-a-half course, on the Schuylkill River, May 8. The heavies—I. N. De Haven, (bow), Geo. Bright, Wm. H. Allison, Theo. Frothingham (stroke)—won by twenty-three seconds in 10:00, The defeated quartet were E. S. Roberts (bow), J. R. Bach, Chas. K. Barnes, Jno. Gillingham (stroke).

THE ARGONAUTA ROWING ASSOCIATION is now officered by the following gentlemen: President, E. W. Humphreys; vice-presidents, E. A. S. Man and B. Stephenson; treasurer, E. R. Craft; corresponding secretary, H. Meigs Jr.; recording secretary, James McNider; captain, Walter Man; lieutenant, W. T. Taylor.

HAMILTON COLLEGE.—The following is a list of the Hamilton College Crew, who are to compete in the regatta at Saratoga in July. The two gentlemen last named are as yet considered substitutes, but, as the crew is not definitely chosen, they may take the place of some of the other men. They are in daily practice on the Mohawk, at Utica, N. Y., and are kept under a rigid course of discipline by the coach, Mr. E. J. Lowe, a graduate of '72, in connection with the Board of Directors: G. R. Butler, Brooklyn, New York, stroke, 20yrs., 5ft. 9¼in., 150lb.; N. Y. Calwell, Meriden, Ct., 21yrs., 6ft. 2in., 179lb.; F. S. Yoochoff, Sleeven, Bulgaria, 24yrs., 6ft. 2in., 166lb.; G. Griffith, Westerville, N. Y., 21yrs., 5ft. 7½in., 155lb.; E. M. Brown, Elbridge, N. Y., 20yrs., 5ft. 10in., 170lb.; W. L. Love, East Saginaw, Mich., 21yrs., 5ft. 7in., 145lb.; E. C. Stringer, Auburn, N. Y., 22yrs., 5ft. 8in., 155lb.; W. R. Prescott, New York, 19yrs., 6ft. 2in., 175lb.

REGATTA OF MASSACHUSETTS UNION ROWING ASSOCIATION.—The first regatta of the above-named Association will take place at City Point, South Boston, Mass., on Decoration Day, May 30. The course will be from Beach House, around a buoy near Fort Independence and back to place of starting. The first race will be for juniors, single-scull open boats, for members of the Association who have never pulled a public race; second, amateur single sculls, best-and-best boats, for Association members; third, double-scull Whitehall boats, for members; fourth, four-oared working-boats, for members; fifth, four-oared best-and-best boats, open to all. The prizes will be silver models of the various classes of boats designated, from six to ten inches in length, made by Harding of Boston, besides suitable prizes in currency, which will be fixed upon hereafter. Entries will close May 22. For further information and for entry address T. A. Scott, Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass.

BROWN will probably be represented in the University races at the Saratoga regatta by the following crew: S. J. Bradbury, Providence, R. I., bow; W. C. Josten, Webster, Mass.; C. E. Field, Brockton, Mass. W. A. Peck, Barrington, R. I.; C. M. Lee, Newport, R. I., F. H. Brown, Niantic, Ct., stroke; C. H. Poor, Haverhill, Mass., substitute. The following persons are mentioned as the material for the Freshmen crew: Winslow (bow), Goodwin, Case, Weston, Whitman, Fairbank, Parrot (stroke).

JOHN HAMILL was on May 13 elected chief engineer of the Pittsburg Fire Department, with which he has been long connected. For some time past Hamill has filled the office of assistant chief engineer. The former chief, Wm. J. White, was a candidate for re-election, but Johnny defeated him by five votes. Jimmy Hamill, the rotund and jovial ex-champion oarsman and sculler, is also connected with the department, and "runs wid de Dequesne."

THE WEST PHILADELPHIA BOAT CLUB recently held their annual election. Result: President, H. V. Sillwell; vice-president, C. H. Tyndall; secretary, F. H. Roberts; assistant secretary, H. C. Phillips; treasurer, W. D. Stovell; solicitor, Chas. Gibbons Jr.; directors, Clarence North, W. D. Stovell, F. Mackie, F. H. Roberts and S. B. Knight.

THE CORNELL UNIVERSITY CREW will, unless a change be hereafter made, be composed of E. L. Gardner, A. R. Gillis, J. N. Oscrom, D. C. Barton, T. Waterman, and J. Lewis. The colegians have received a six-oar gig from Blaker of Cambridge, Mass., who has furnished Bowdoin with two boats of the same sort.

THE PROPOSED MATCH between W. Lunadan and W. Nicholson, to row a race in covered-in boats for $200 a-side, in Rushton's baths, Liverpool, owing to press of business preventing Swaddle & Winship from building the boats for which the articles stipulated.

THE SCULLERS' MATCH between Fred A. Plaisted and Patrick Reagan of Boston, Mass., is for $250 a side, and James Bent is the stakeholder.

THE EMERALD BOAT CLUB of Portland, Me., recently elected the following officers: President, E. Brady; vice-president, J. E. Donohue; recording secretary, J. Lappan; corresponding secretary, R. H. Parker; treasurer, W. Logue.

JOHN RIGLIN is notified of a letter addressed to him in our care.

THE TURF.

KENTUCKY ASSOCIATION SPRING MEETING.

FIRST DAY—MONDAY, MAY 10.

Forty-eight years ago the Kentucky Racing Association was established in Lexington, Ky., and it is now the oldest turf organization in the United States. It held its annual Spring meeting over the time-honored course last week, commencing on Monday, May 10, and continuing over six consecutive days, in accordance with its previous custom. A great drawback to the unalloyed enjoyment of the Kentucky turfmen there assembled was the absence of the popular and respected President of the Association, John C. Breckenridge, who, it is feared, is lying on a bed of death, his medical advisers having given up all hopes of his recovery. There was a large attendance of spectators present on the first day, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather, heavy rains having fallen on the previous night, rendering the track deep and muddy, while a smart shower fell on the day of the race. The state of the track materially diminished the fields of starters in the three races, owners being unwilling to risk the breakdown or injury of their horses in the heavy going.

THE PHOENIX HOTEL STAKES

was the first race on the programme, and was for three-year-olds, at $50 each, play or pay, with $250 added by the Association, dash of one mile and an eighth. Of the fourteen nominations to this stake, the following six came to the post: Frank Harper's b. c. Ten Broeck, by Imp. Phaeton; S. J. Salyear's br. c. Bill Bruce, by Enquirer; J. A. Grinstead's c. f. Goldmine, by Australian; H. P. McGrath's c. c. Aristides, by Leamington; R. Colston's b. c. Millionaire, by Planet; and T. J. Megibben's c. f. Elemi, by Asteroid. In the pools Aristides sold for first choice, bringing $140; Ten Broeck, $100; Bill Bruce, $50; and the field, $20. Ten Broeck and Goldmine went off side by side, with Aristides some distance behind them, and apparently unable to extend himself in the mud, which was fetlock-deep. The two leaders ran lapped to the half-mile pole, where Goldmine fell back, and Ten Broeck, going on with the lead, won the race in a canter by half a dozen lengths, Bill Bruce beating Goldmine for second place in the last few strides, and Aristides never showing conspicuously in the race. Time, 2:11¾, which was very slow time. This stake was established in 1826, before the Kentucky Racing Association was established, and has been won by many famous horses, notably Lexington, Berthune, and Star Davis. When Lexington won it in 1833, a false start occurred with a field of seven runners, and Lexington, Madonna and Garrett Davis ran the course over a track knee-deep in mud. The judges refused to give the runaways any time, but ordered them to the post at once. Lexington (then called Darley) took the lead, was never headed, and disdanced all his opponents in the first heat running. Wild Irishman, Madonna, and a filly by Glencoe out of Cub, winning the race in two heats in 1:55½, 1:57.

THE POST STAKES,

for all ages, $50 each, p. p., with $400 added, of which $100 to the second horse, dash of one mile and a half, had five entries and three runners, viz., Keene Richards' c. c. Monmouth, Robinson & Morgan's c. c. Big Fellow and Frank B. Harper's b. c. Excel, 4yrs.; and R. Colston's b. c. Millionaire, 3yrs. Monmouth sold for $40; Big Fellow, $15; and Millionaire, $46. The latter was first off, but was soon passed by Excel, the favorite waiting behind. At the half-mile pole Monmouth took second place, and from this point the race was confined to him and Frank Harper's colt; Monmouth winning by half a length in 3:39½; Millionaire third.

FOURTH DAY—THURSDAY, MAY 13.

Continued cool weather, improved attendance, and good track were the features of the fourth day of the meeting. It proved to be one destined to be long memorable in turf annals, for the mile records of Palladeen and Selina (1:43), made on the Louisville course; of Harry Gilbert and Springbok, at Utica (1:42¾); and of Gray Planet, at Saratoga, (1:42½), were effectually effaced by a son of Enquirer and grandson of Lexington, known to the swimmers of America. This was done in a selling race, for a purse of $300, for all ages, mile heats; the conditions being that horses entered to be sold for $2,400 for were to carry weight for age; horses entered to be sold for $2,000 were allowed 5lb.; and horses allowed 7lb.; and 10lb., if to be sold for $500. The winner was to be sold after the race at public auction, and any excess over the selling price was to go to the second horse. There were three entries—J. B. Rodes' b. c. Secretary, 3yrs., by Enquirer, dam by Bonnie Scotland, entered to be sold for $2,000, and carrying full weight for age; W. A. Keene Richards' c. f. Misfortune, 4yrs., $500, 94lb.; and J. A. Grinstead's gr. g. Light Coin, 3yrs., $500, 77lb. Searcher was made the favorite, selling for $80; Misfortune, $28; and Light Coin, $10. The favorite got off first, made the running throughout, and, increasing his lead at every stride, won the race in one heat, by distancing his two opponents, in one hundred and three-quarter seconds, being the fastest time on record, and beating Gray Planet's mile record, made with 4lb less than weight for age, by three-quarters of a second. The colt was not distressed in the least at the finish, and when, in accordance with the conditions of the race, he was put up at auction, the enthusiasm of the crowd was so great that room could hardly be got for the bids in front of the stand. There being no second horse in the race (both the others having been distanced), the stewards decided that the surplus, if any, should go to the owner of the winner of the race. The bidding for Searcher was very spirited; but Mr. Rodes was determined not to part with his colt, and, after bidding him up to $2,400, he knocked down to him at that price. As a matter of interesting record, we cite the time of the several quarters of this race: First quarter-mile, 24 seconds; half-mile, 1:18½; three-quarters, 1:13½; mile, 1:41¾.

The mile-and-quarter dash, for all ages, for the Association purse of $300, of which $50 went to the second horse, had five entries, viz., Robinson & Morgan's ch. c. Astrial, 4yrs.; T. J. Megibben's c. f. Elemi, 3yrs.; Keene Richards' b. c. Don Carlos, 3yrs.; W. W. Goddard's c. f., 4yrs.; and J. A. Grinstead's b. f. Kate, 3yrs. The betting was $50 to $20 on Astrial against the field, and when Elemi had the lead he turns made the running, he passed them both and won in a canter in 2:11¾; Elemi second, and Don Carlos third.

FIFTH DAY—FRIDAY, MAY 14.

The excitement caused by the unprecedented performance of the Enquirer colt Searcher in the selling race on the previous day, when he made the fastest mile time on record, increased the public interest in the race, and led to the largest attendance of the meeting. The weather was delightful, the track fast, and the sport highly exciting.

THE CUTTERS' STAKES,

a dash of two miles for three-year-olds, $50 each, play or pay, with $250 added, was the first race on the card. Out of the eleven nominations, the following five came to the post: Robinson & Morgan's ch. c. Astrial, 3yrs.; R. Big Sandy, T. B. Harper's b. c. Ten Broeck, Robinson & Morgan's br. f. by imp. Australian, and Ewalt & Swiney's c. f. Emma C. Chesapeake and Ten Broeck were the favorites over the field; the latter having won the Pohnix Hotel Stakes on the first day of the meeting, and the former on the first day of the meeting, and the former having won the Post Stakes on the third day. Chesapeake and Ten Broeck were the favorites at 2 to 1 each, Big Sandy selling at 4 to 1, and the field at 5 to 1. Astrial was withdrawn, and Big Sandy, T. B. Harper's b. c. Ten Broeck, Robinson & Morgan's br. f. by imp. Australian, and Ewalt & Swiney's c. f. Emma C. Chesapeake and Ten Broeck were the favorites over the field; the latter having won the Pohnix Hotel Stakes on the first day of the meeting, and the former

PY SHIMINY, VAS DOT SO?

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY GEORGE THE HARTY BOY.

An honest old Dutchman, Herr Griebel by name,
On horseback was traveling one day,
But the night coming on, and his horse falling lame,
And his home being ten miles away,
He drove to the door of a settler close by,
And requested permission to stop
Over night, if they'd let him, a bed on to lie,
A meal, and of schnapps a small drop.
Walk in," says mine host, "right welcome you'll be,
Partake of our rude, simple fare—
So seldom; indeed, do a stranger we see,
It's a treat, now, I really declare."

His horse was well fed, the Dutchman was, too,
And he felt quite contented and gay;
So with pipes and some schnapps, and a story or two,
The evening passed quickly away.
The clock striking ten, mine host then arose,
While Griebel he yawned in his chair.
"By Jove, it is late; now who would suppose
It was past ten o'clock, I declare.
Come, let us to bed—we believe in the rule
To early to bed and arise."
Herr Griebel was sleepy—mine host was no fool—
The Dutchman could scarce ope his eyes.

"In regard to our sleeping, our quarters are small,
And that you of course plainly see.
My children are sleeping up over the hall,
While my wife tumbles in here with me.
Now, tell," says mine host, "as to where you will snooze,
Upstairs with the children or here.
If with me you prefer, my wife we'll excuse,
And you'll sleep like a top," never fear."
The Dutchman detested the sight of a child,
And downstairs he said he would stay;
So bidding good-night, the wife sweetly smiled
And quickly upstairs passed away.

Herr Griebel retired, and soon 'gan to snore;
In fact, mine host afterwards said
He could not get sleep—so he laid on the floor,
And gave him the whole of the bed.
The morning it came, and all hands awoke,
Excepting the children upstairs;
When the wife called to John, and thus to him spoke:
"Tell the children to come down to prayers."
Well, downstairs they came—the first little child
Was sixteen, if she was a day;
The next, twenty-two—the Dutchman was wild—
Dropped his knife and his fork in dismay.

"Dxcuse me, mine frien; so dem was de child
You wanted to put in mine bed."
"They are," says mine host; Herr Griebel yust smiled—
"Py shiminy!" was all that he said.

HOW THE CIRCUS SHOWED At Shawstown.

A STORY SUITED TO THE SEASON.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY VANDYKE BROWN.

I.

When a railroad was first talked of in Shawstown, Joel Booth opposed the project vigorously. He said in a town meeting called to consider the subject:

"We don't want no noisy engines a-running through this place. Railroads, it seems to me, is the works of the Devil, and them as builds 'em is Satan's own laborers. I'm proud to say, as a Christian man, I never rid on one yet, and I pray the Lord I never shall!"

Some people said that Joel's opposition grew out of the fact of his owning the line of stages plying between Shawstown and Elms.

Despite Joel, the railroad was built; and the fate of the stage-coaches was accordingly sealed. One of them became a favorite roosting-place for the Deacon's hens; and the other, stripped of its wheels, lay disconsolately in the meadow lot, a relic of the slow-going past. It was a year after the completion of the road before Joel Booth overcame his prejudices sufficiently to get aboard a car. When he finally yielded to the pressure of persuasion, it was with a prayerful spirit, and in the firm conviction that before the train reached Elms it would be dashed to pieces. As no such disaster occurred, Joel was tempted to regard his deliverance as a miracle. By the time another year had passed, however, and a number of trips had been made without accident, the Deacon dispensed with prayers before buying a ticket. And now, when the road had been in successful operation for six years, he was one of the largest stockholders of the company. So it came about, one April afternoon, that the only passenger who alighted at the Shawstown station was Deacon Joel Booth—the man who was once proud to say he "had never rid on a railroad."

Joel had been absent from home for somewhat more than a week. Such an event was of uncommon occurrence—so uncommon, that only business of a most pressing nature could have been the cause. Nodding salutation to the young man who stood on the platform, and who performed the combined duties of ticket-agent, baggage-master, and assistant superintendent, the Deacon walked hurriedly up the main street, acknowledging to himself that the town had changed little or none during his absence. But when he came to the square fronting which stood the hotel, a singular innovation in the familiar surroundings caused him to stop short. Upon the fence which inclosed the stable-yard of the Spaulding House appeared, in glaring letters of red and blue, a series of posters completely covering the broad surface of pine. And in language as glowing as the colors, the people of Shawstown, together with the world at large, were duly notified of the manifold attractions of "The Great Hippodromatic Circus and Star of the East Caravan." To aid the average mind in grasping the limits of this comprehensive combination of wealth, wisdom and wonder, illustrations of some of the more marvelous features were presented with lavish liberality. Especially noticeable was the scene representing "Mons. Hopole" in the den of lions. There were seven of these kingly beasts, of fabulous size and of a bright saffron hue, and each one of the seven was devouring, with evident relish, a piece of vermilion beef. In the midst of the group rose the Herculean form of Mr. Hopole, dressed in tights of the same color as the lions' skins, and with a vermilion-handled knife cutting the vermilion pieces of meat which would presently rouse the ferocious natures of the vermilion-jawed animals. There was something painfully thrilling about this picture. It would be so natural and apparently so easy for any one of those seven lions suddenly to pounce upon the unprotected Mr. Hopole, and in short order put an end to his daring career! There were other illustrations of a less sanguinary nature. One, representing a sylphlike young lady riding a snow-white horse, was particularly interesting from the fact that the sylph was gracefully poised in the air fully six feet above the steed's back, and there evidently she intended to remain until the animal had made the circuit of the arena.

All things considered, it was natural that Joel Booth should place his carpet-bag upon the ground, draw forth his bandana, and wipe his spectacles. Here was something unheard of in the annals of Shawstown history. What did it mean? Readjusting his gold-rimmed glasses, he proceeded to make another careful inspection. Did he read aright, or was it some ugly phantom? A small yellow bill posted on the flank of the milk-white steed bore this announcement:

WILL EXHIBIT IN SHAWSTOWN
ON DEACON JOEL BOOTH'S LOT,
SATURDAY, APRIL 31.
☞ Don't forget the Date!

The Deacon was astounded. He drew forth his bandana once more, and mechanically rubbed the bows which had disclosed to his vision this astounding statement. The result was simply to bring the black letters in bolder relief. There was no power in the handkerchief to rub away the palpable reality of that yellow poster.

"As I'm a Christian man," said Joel Booth at last—and the words were uttered precisely in the tone which the Deacon adopted at the weekly prayer-meeting—"as I'm a Christian man, there aint no circus show a-going to exhibit on my lot!"

This solemn asseveration seemed to relieve the Deacon's mind. He took up the carpet-bag once more, turned his back upon the Great Hippodromatic Circus and Star of the East Caravan, and proceeded on his way with a face like Fate.

"Hippodramatic is good!"

Dan Middleton made this observation a month before the beginning of the tenting season. It was called forth by a suggestion on the part of Billy Henderson, who had traveled with Middleton's show for a dozen consecutive Summers. Billy was an eminently useful man. He rode in the entree, played clown, did a juggling-act, sustained the third position in the leaping—he claimed to have cleared six horses once, but five were his usual limit—came into the ring as an outsider bent on earning the two dollars offered for riding the trick-mule, and in connection with his numerous other duties officiated as boss hostler, and occupied his leisure moments in playing the bass-drum—any hint thrown out by Billy was generally acted upon, provided, always, it did not conflict with the managerial ideas of Dan Middleton. Dan was not altogether a successful manager. He had been reared in the ring, and understood thoroughly what was required to make up a good show; but, for some unaccountable cause, he never professed to his knowledge. The people who composed his company were of an unbiddable and chaotic order. Dan's daughter, Miss May Middleton—she was christened Mary, but the r was dropped on the bills—did the slack-wire business and rode a pad-horse. It was not the fault of the young lady that she inherited the beaked nose and lank form of her mother; but then it was unfortunate for an equestrienne. Up to the age of fourteen, May appeared as the "child wonder;" the following season, she blossomed out as the "charming and intrepid" lady rider, and, under another name, as "the queen of the air." It was something for May to be a queen of even so intangible and unsatisfactory a realm as air. She was not graceful in her movements, and she seldom accomplished her equestrian act without falling at least twice. Mrs. Middleton was a thin-faced woman of uncertain age and insignificant solidity. She rode in the entree, and appeared as the mistress of the trick pony "Cecil." Enough time had been spent in training that pony to prepare half a dozen horses of ordinary shiftly for brilliant careers; but Cecil proved the most perverse animal that ever enjoyed the advantages of a professional education. After five seasons in the ring, he would invariably turn to the left whenever the shrill voice of Mrs. Middleton shouted "To the right, sir!" and he was given to jumping over the bank of the sawdust arena, in the middle of his performance, to the frightening of spectators, and compelling Billy Henderson to chase him into the dressing-room. Then he had other eccentricities, such as wagging his ear when he was "playing dead," and kicking viciously with his hind legs when his mistress attempted to approach him. The pony was not talented, but he was quite in keeping with Dan Middleton's Circus. Besides Miss May, Mrs. Middleton, Billy Henderson and Cecil, there were several other permanent features of Dan's show. There was a young man called "Stretcher," who was given so many names on the bills that he started out each season uncertain as to his own identity; he was a fixed star. Then there was a Mons. Hopole, who went into the lions' den, and who had, at an early stage of his existence, withdrawn from a hop-yard to join the circus. Dan at first addressed him at "Hop-pole," and this had suggested the name which appeared on the saffron-colored pictures; he was known among the members of the show as "Hops." There was also a boy, whose paternage was an unsolved riddle, and whose propensity for practicing contortion had recommended him to the favorable notice of Manager Middleton, and decided his future; and there was a girl, who had attained the awkward age of thirteen years, and who impressed one with the idea that nature designed her to grow as old as she had grown, and never grow older. She was training for the trapeze. These were the fixed attractions in Dan Middleton's Circus. Three or four general performers, who were willing to work and to whom salary was no object, could secure positions at almost any season of the year.

"Hippodromatic is good!"

It was a blustering day in March, and Dan Middleton was sitting on a roll of canvas in the barn where his four cages of wild animals were quartered for the Winter. The manager was endeavoring to determine upon a suitable name for his show. One of Dan's peculiarities was that he never traveled two consecutive seasons under the same appellation. This enabled him to visit the towns in the immediate neighborhood of his Winter quarters with each recurring Spring. In the barn with the manager were Billy Henderson, Hops, Stretcher, the boy contortionist—he was never called anything but Boy—and Tony Duncan, who had been engaged for the approaching season to act in the capacity of advance agent. As already intimated, the subject under consideration on this particular March day was a name for the show.

"Hippodromatic wouldn't be bad," suggested Billy Henderson.

"Hippodromatic is good!" reflected Dan.

"But," protested Tony Duncan, "there's no such word in the dictionary!"

This announcement was followed by a profound silence.

"What if there aint?" said Dan, at last. "It sounds well—The Great Hippodromatic Circus!"

"Yes, it sounds first-rate," assented Tony, who considered it unwise to hold out against the opinions of his employer.

"Hipperdramatic, I should say, was immense." This from Stretcher, who was cutting the air with a riding-whip.

"It's settled, then. I'll write it down." The manager drew forth an envelope and pencil and pronounced the words aloud as he wrote: "The—Great—Hip—here, you Duncan, write it yourself."

Tony took the pencil, while Hops, Stretcher and the Boy gathered round, and watched him curiously, but in vain, spell.

"Now for the animals," said Dan. "The Great Hippodramatic Circus and—and what?"

"Royal Havana Menagerie," added the Boy, with the vision of last season's bills before his mind.

"Shut up!" said Dan.

"Don't you know we've had that?" observed Hops in a tone of supreme contempt.

"And can't have it again," put in Billy Henderson, as though he were speaking of the smallpox.

"The truth is," reflected Dan, as he gazed at the two meek-looking lions in the cage opposite, "that aint a very heavy menagerie. The bear, I think, is sick; the leopard is restless like and growing thin; three of the monkeys have died; and as for them lions—Hops, you must be gentle with 'em, or they won't last till Autumn."

"But the smaller the show, the bigger the bills," suggested Billy Henderson.

"That's the talk!" observed Tony.

"Say!" exclaimed Stretcher, who had been amusing himself by performing an imaginary ride on the floor, "aint there another word beside menage? What is it, now? The great—great Count—Car—Carbuncle; the great Carbuncle!"

"No, no! Caravan!"

"Yes, caravan. That's immense!"

"How would this do?" said Tony Duncan thoughtfully: "The Great Hippodromatic Circus and Star of the East Caravan."

"Just the cheese!" exclaimed Dan, slapping his knee. And so the show was christened.

Joel Booth had a daughter, the prettiest girl in Shawstown. Her name was Dora. On the very day that Dora's father left home for a week's absence, a stranger—a young man better dressed and better looking than any young man in Shawstown—came strolling up the walk and inquired for Deacon Booth.

"He went away to-day, and will be gone a week," said Dora.

"Did he? That's unfortunate. Perhaps I could see Mrs. Booth?"

"My mother is dead," said Dora.

"Pardon me! Have you any brothers?"

"None," answered Dora, raising her eyes.

"Perhaps" he added, "I could transact my business with you?"

"Perhaps you could," rejoined Dora simply.

"I want to engage your father's lot—the one on the left of the road."

"I don't think he'd rent it, sir. That's his pasture land. He might sell it, sir."

"It's settled, then. I'll write it down." The manager drew forth an envelope and pencil and pronounced the words aloud as he wrote: "The—Great—Hip—here, you Duncan, write it yourself."

Tony took the pencil, while Hops, Stretcher and the Boy gathered round, and watched him curiously, but in vain, spell.

BASEBALL.

ATHLETIC vs. ATLANTIC.

On May 11 the Athletics arrived in town, and on that day played their first game this season with the Atlantics. The contest proved to be unusually interesting, and as pretty a display of fielding as one sees in half a dozen championship matches. Thus far this season the Atlantics have had what may be regarded as two weak points in their new nine, namely, the lack of a pitcher combining accuracy of delivery with speed, and an effective occupant of the second-base position. In this game they put on a new man for pitcher, and placed Boyd at second base, and the change worked very satisfactorily. In regard to the pitching, there was a slight difficulty at first, owing to a doubt being had as to the legality of the delivery, inasmuch as Clinton threw the ball in by a plain underhand throw. For the benefit of umpires generally, we would state that any delivery of the ball is legal provided the arm which holds the ball when swung forward passes the body of the pitcher below the line of the hip. That is the rule in both professional and amateur codes, and therefore all the umpire has to do is to watch the pitcher's arm when it passes the body. If it passes above the line of the hip, he must call "foul balk;" if below that line, it is a legal delivery. This should be made a permanent rule of the game. Clinton, in his debut as a pitcher, showed that he had speed and tolerable command of the ball; but he should avoid all the preliminary motions in delivery that he can; for the moment he makes one of these movements, and fails to follow it up by delivering the ball, he commits a balk—that is, he cannot make such movement and afterwards throw to a base. Therefore he should avoid as many such movements as possible, especially that of moving his forward foot with a series of steps. The game began at 4 P. M. with the Athletics at the bat, and they gave the field easy chances for outs, and retired. The Atlantics followed suit, and a series of blanks began to mark the score. In the second inning the Athletics batted sharply, but Kessler and Boyd made pretty stops, and they were neatly thrown out. On the other side the Atlantics popped up balls for catches, that promising young player Rocap making a pretty catch. He is an acquisition to the Athletic nine, being active, intelligent, quiet, and good alike in the field and at the bat. We liked his style very much. It was not until the fourth inning that the Athletics could get in a run; and, after a base-hit by Clapp, Force gave Cassidy a chance for a catch, but the latter slipped just as he handled the ball, and the result was Force reached his second and Clapp ran home. We noticed, by the way, that, while the Athletic players generally received applause for good plays, Force's playing was received in silence. In the fifth inning Sutton hit safely for his base, and on Clinton's poor throw to first base he reached second, McBride batting him to third. On McBride's sharp hit to Nichols, Sutton was captured in handsome style at third by Nichols; besides which, the striker was put out at first by the double-play, Nichols fielding the side out beautifully. In the sixth inning, through an error of judgment by Boyd, who failed to put Eggler out—forced off by Clapp—the Athletics got in an unearned run on a single base-hit. Boyd offset it, however, by capturing Clapp at second on a good throw by Knowdel, who played well behind the bat this game. In the next inning the Athletics scored their first and only earned run, a two-baser by Fisler, followed by singles by Sutton and McBride, breaking the ice, three runs being scored. In the interim the Athletics had supported McBride's fine pitching so well that the Atlantics could scarcely get a base-hit, and a run was an impossibility; the Brooklyn team finally being Chicagoed, only two errors marking the Athletic fielding. In the ninth inning, though Sutton and McBride made base-hits, a fine throw in by Clack, after a neat catch, closed the inning with a neat double-play, and so the Athletics had to be content with the small figure of 5 runs. The game was well umpired by Martin. The score:

ST. LOUIS vs. CHICAGO.

Concerning the second meeting between these rival Western clubs at St. Louis, Mo., May 8, a correspondent says: "The crowd was unprecedented, and surged and rolled in multitudes in every direction. There were at least 15,000 people present, and the estimate is placed by some as high as 20,000. The intense interest of the visitors was frequently manifested by loud applause, and at the finish was such as had never before been seen on a baseball field. Many distinguished visitors were present, including General Sherman. Profiting by their experience in the previous contest, the Whites substituted Devlin for Zettlein in the pitcher's position. Hastings relieved Higham behind the bat, Zettlein going to first and Glenn to centre. The changes, as will be seen, were extremely judicious, but eight base-hits being made off Devlin's underhand throws. He also fielded magnificently in the position. Warren covered himself with glory at third, and retired eight players without an error. Keerl and Peters also fielded finely, and Hines made a magnificent catch in left. Strange to say, Zettlein the most effective with the stick for his nine, while Chapman was the only Brown that got in more than one base-hit during the progress of the game. It is beyond doubt that the support given by Bradley, especially in the outfield game, again won the day. The outfielding of the Whites was magnificent, not a chance being missed, while Cuthbert and Pike took in some extraordinary flies. The Chicago boys are by no means in disgrace. They thoroughly proved their superiority in an uphill game. The extraordinary bad luck which attended them in their first eight innings did not unnerve them in the least, and they went into the ninth, with four to tie and five to win, as coolly as if they had not been so dreadfully whitewashed. All the newspaper offices and a number of prominent saloons exposed bulletins, upon which was represented the result of each inning, as telegraphed from the baseball park. Around these central records multitudes flocked, and received with the wildest cheers the results as announced. St. Louis is enthusiastic over its second triumph, and nothing else is talked about on the streets or in the hotels or in the barrooms."

BOSTON vs. PHILADELPHIA.

On the ground of the Boston Club was contested on Tuesday, May 11, the first game of the present season between that club and the Philadelphia nine, over one thousand spectators assembling to witness what was expected to be an A 1 match. In this they were badly disappointed, as the Pearls did not make near as fine a display as had been looked for, nor as they are capable of making, ordinarily. The Bostons batted Fisher freely, and when, in the sixth inning, McMullin was substituted, they served the change-pitcher even worse. With the "Fillies" base-hits came few and far between, and, when made, availed but little. Their fielding was only ordinary. McGeary's second base was rather weak, for, no other man seemed by no means strong, though Fulmer was an exception, his play being without errors. For the Bostons, Beals did fine service in centre field, capturing three difficult flies and winning a large share of the day's glory. Barnes received an injury to one of his feet in the eighth inning, and Tommy came up to second and took his place, Schafer going into the field. A wild throw by O'Rourke resulted in giving the Philadelphias their first run, and their second was partly due to slow handling by Leonard, nothing having been earned.

HARTFORD vs. PHILADELPHIA.

On May 12 the above-named clubs met for the first time this season on the grounds of the former club, Hartford, Ct., only about 800 spectators being in attendance, owing to the inclement state of the weather, the wind blowing a gale and light showers of rain falling at intervals during the game in the second inning, of which a suspension for about ten minutes was necessitated. The Hartfords, having won the toss, sent the Philadelphias to the bat; but both sides were quickly retired for a blank. In the second inning, after York and Ferguson had made good hits, and had obtained an extra base on an error by McGeary, they were assisted to score by Mills and Bond, who sacrificed themselves at first for that purpose. In the third inning they added two more runs to the two already obtained. Carey, after making a base-hit and stealing second and third cleverly, scored on York's hit to Murnan; and Cummings, who had his base given him on called balls, was brought home by Ferguson's clean hit to centre. After this inning the Hartfords made but two single base-hits; and as the Philadelphias played a fine fielding game, the home-team were unable to add to their score. It was not until the seventh inning that the visitors were allowed to get first-base, when an error by Ferguson gave McGeary a life; and although he was, our correspondent says, fairly thrown out while stealing second by Allison, he scored the only run the Philies obtained during the game, on good hits by Addy and Meyerle. A finely-played point by Carey, in dropping Fisher's fly, forced the two latter out at third and second, respectively. This left the score 4 to 0 in favor of the home-team, and it remained so to the finish. This is the third successive championship game the Hartfords have played with but a single error to mar their fielding, and it is doubtful if this record has ever been equaled. The Philadelphias, with the exception of McGeary at third, played a fine fielding game; Snyder, Meyerle and Murnan being particularly worthy of mention, the two latter putting out twenty-three of the twenty-seven strikers. The high wind, which blew against the batters, may account in a measure for the weakness shown by both clubs at the bat. The Philies struck out six times, showing the effectiveness of Cummings' delivery, from which but three base-hits were made, while the Hartfords batted Fisher for eight, earning one run. The score:

HARTFORD vs. ATHLETIC.

The above-named clubs played their first championship game together this season on the grounds of the former club May 13, in the presence of about 2,500 spectators. The game was hotly contested, brilliantly played, and close up to the ninth inning, when it became very exciting. Wm. McLean of Philadelphia, who filled the umpire's position satisfactorily to both clubs, called the game at 3:30 P. M., the Athletics going first to the bat. Weak batting and sharp fielding on both sides prevented run-getting in the first six innings; Carey's fine one-hand stop of a sharply hit ground-ball in the third, Bond's beautiful throw from right to third in the sixth, and York and Eggler's beautifully-taken fly-balls in the second and third, respectively, being the noticeable features of the fielding. In the seventh inning, after Allison had captured Sutton and Hall on foul bounds, and Ferguson had fielded McBride out at first, Remsen got his first on an error of Fisler—who allowed the ball to go between his legs—and his second on a passed ball. Mills then took the bat and sent a hot one to left-centre, on which hit Remsen scored; and as the next three strikers were retired in order, and neither side were able to get first base in the eighth, it left the score at the beginning of the ninth inning one to nothing in favor of the home-team. Fisler having been disabled in the eighth inning, Richmond was called in to fill the vacancy at second base, and the ninth inning was begun. Force, the first striker, made a clean hit, but was forced out at second immediately after by Carey's short hit to Carey. Richmond then struck out, Allison dropping the third strike, throwing to Mills for a double-play; but the latter, instead of taking the ball off his base and touching Anson (who did not leave his bag), and then touching the base, which would have put Richmond out, took the ball with his foot on the base, and Richmond alone was out, thereby spoiling an excellent opportunity for a double play, and saving the Athletics from a Chicago. A clean hit by Sutton sent Anson to third, and the former stole second immediately after—two men on bases, two out, and two runs wanted to give them the lead. A good hit would do it. Hall, the next striker, proved equal to the emergency, making a beautiful safe hit to left centre, which brought Anson and Sutton in; and as Allison captured McBride's foul fly, the Athletics were done at the bat, the score standing two to one in their favor. The Hartfords had an inning to pull up in, and the excitement was intense. Ferguson went first to the bat, and hit a slow bound-ball to Sutton, whose fine throw was muffed by Anson, and Fergy was happy with the life given him. Richmond then led Remsen's sharp ground-hit go between his legs, which not only gave Remsen a life at first, but allowed Captain Bob to safely land himself on the third bag, and Remsen stole second soon after. Two men on bases, none out, and two runs wanting to win. Mills took the ball, and, waiting until he got a good ball, sent it spinning over the ground to right field, Ferguson and Remsen scoring amid the wildest kind of enthusiasm. The spectators, almost crazed with excitement, rushed from their seats to the field, yelling like demons, surrounding Captain Ferguson and his men, and congratulating them on their success. It was fully fifteen minutes before the grounds could be cleared and play resumed. Bond got his second on a wild throw by Richmond to first, and Mills scored. Sutton then fielded Allison out at first, Anson returning the ball to Sutton, and Bond, who was trying to steal third, was put out. Then followed a run of good batting, Burdock leading with a two-baser, followed by single base-hits by Carey, Cummings and York; Burdock and Carey scoring meanwhile, and Clapp ending the game by throwing York out at second. The Hartfords secured five runs in this inning, which left the score 6 to 2 at the finish. The game was played under protest, President Bulkley denying Force's right to play with the Athletics.

On the 13th inst. their fifth game was played upon the same grounds, when considerable muffing was done upon both sides, the champions playing in a spiritless manner, but managing to win without trouble. The Washingtons did not score till the second inning, and then made four on errors by George Wright, Barnes, McVey, and Manning, Barnes letting two runs in by a bad throw to first. Spalding pitched for seven innings, and then changed with Manning. The score:

MUTUAL vs. NEW HAVEN.

The New York Mutuals and the New Haven Club on May 11 treated the residents of the City of Elms to probably the finest exhibition of ball-play they were ever fortunate enough to witness. The score at the end of the ninth inning was 1 to 1, and two more innings were required to decide the game, a bad error on the part of Geer giving the Mutes another run, and thereby winning for them the game. The victors made three errors, and the losers eleven.

BEACON vs. TECHNOLOGY.

The Beacon of Boston and the nine of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology played a game in Brookline, Mass., on Saturday, May 8; and as the first, second and third basemen of the Beacons failed to put in an appearance, owing to the showery and threatening state of the weather, they went into the game with six of their nine and one substitute, and, though the chances of victory under such circumstances were slim, they won easily by a score of 35 to 4, the "Techs," though good players individually, becoming completely demoralized in the second inning, their fielding improving afterwards. The Beacon's success was mainly due to Beals' very effective pitching, and to Crane's brilliant play behind the bat. The "Techs" made most of their base-hits on flies, which the outfielders, had there been any, would have had. Of the Beacons, Briggs, Lamb, Pierce and Crane batted finely, and their fielding generally was good. The Institute men, who are capable of far better play, seemed to rival one another in making errors. The score:

PHILADELPHIA vs. ATLANTIC.

The third match between these clubs took place at Brooklyn on May 13, on which occasion the Atlantics kept down the Philadelphia score to a smaller figure than in the other two contests, the "Fillies" not earning a single run, and only scoring four, while the Atlantics only escaped a whitewash by a muff and bad throw of McGeary's. The Philadelphias scored a single in the third inning on three balls and a wild pitch, the sixth inning they made two runs on three balls, a passed ball and a couple of base-hits; and in the seventh inning they made a single by errors of Kessler and Knowdel. Of the general play on the Atlantic side, Nichols and Kessler bore off the palm in the infield, and Fabor in the outfield. Clinton's pitching was not so effective as in the Athletic game, only two men for three hits Knowdel caught well, as a general thing, and Crane played his base in very good style. Cassidy led at the bat on the Atlantic side, and McGeary on the part of the Philadelphians. The game was well umpired by Matthews, who was assisted in his work by the new rule for counting balls and strikes, a machine suggested in THE CLIPPER last Fall.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, May 17, '75.

The seasonable weather of the week just closed reminded us forcibly of "what might have been" had Spring put in an appearance at the proper time. The bright sunshine developed the butterflies of fashion, and the great thoroughfares of the Metropolis, like Joseph's coat, were resplendent in many colors; Broadway corners exhibited living specimens of the statuesque and "sculpturesque," and the city was made glad by the jocund jests and fanciful jibes of the merry go-rounder, as he sought the spicy aroma of liver-and-onions which permeated the cheerful precincts of the free-lunch dispensaries. "O! Spring! Spring! beautiful Spring!" [Paterpipe.—We ought to mention, in addition to lingering Winter, that yesterday, Sunday, was cool enough to make it a decided acquisition to the comforts of the family circle.—ED. CLIP.].....Matinees grow in grace and favor. On the occasion of the benefit of Frances Davenport at the Fifth-avenue Theatre, the proceeds exhibited the exhilarating sum of three thousand and three hundred dollars, and the heart of the divine Fanny palpitated with delight as she viewed the scene so charming. This was on Tuesday afternoon, May 11. At Booth's, on the following Thursday, the angelic Tooker took a much larger sum, namely, nearly four thousand dollars! The man's pile oversized the lady's some six hundred dollars; and yet we prate of our gallantry, of our devotion to the female sex, and of our willingness to lay down our lives that she may live, when in reality we are unwilling to lay down as many ducats for her as we pass over to a wicked man like Tooker! Next week "The Big Bonanza" attains its Centennial, on which occasion a cart-load of silver bricks will be distributed among the lady patrons of the house. Its a big thing all round, and the theatre will no doubt be packed as tight as a pile of bricks.....And this reminds us of Tracy Titus and Mrs. Oates, who have agreed to disagree, and run in double harness no more. He has had his surfeit of Oates, while she casts off the silken yoke that bound her tight as Tracy. A figurative poet might say: "A woman who would husband her love can't love her husband!" Yes, oh yes!.....Trade ought to improve, now that all the evidence is in; but who can tell? Ah! how harmful has been this sad and doubtful case! On Plymouth rock was founded the Beecher church. On Brooklyn Heights we find the height of infamy. With your kind approval, James will now offer a few lines of comfortable poetry.

"IT" AND ITS RESULTS.

"A ponbroker's bin an' arested his klerk"
Sed me frend with the kutest of glances,
"He giv 2 much kash on a spurenous chane—
'Twas a case of improper advances!"

.....The Frisco boys make a capital team, and, unlike the other musical party referred to, move along as harmoniously as clock-work. The instrumentative is good, even to the drum, which can be heard; while the quartet, soft and low as the breath of the morn, and sweet as solian strains, can't be beat. The long skirt worn by Backus, as Clotilde, reminds us of another favorite comedian—George France's train! As we have frequently stated, Birch, as a public instructor, is equaled by none if we except Arthur Bent, who, on music bent, as exemplified in his cornet solo, is a most excellent teeter! Have at thee again? Nay? Ah, ha! 'tis well.....There was a man who wielded the rattan at a variety theatre, and so rapacious was he in his demeanor that the boys of the upper circles looked upon him as a rattan terrier, but would obey his every behest as though he run the whole world. There was another man, whose first and only love performed on the high trapeze, and did the "mid-air" business generally. One night, as she finished her poses, and came down grandly amid a scene of wild excitement in the gallery, and "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer" in the orchestra, the rattan man approached the other man, and thus to him did say:

"She done well to-night, didn't she?"
"Tolerably well," said the other man.
"Got lots of applause; I never seen anything like it."
"Yes; the applause was liberal, I must admit."
"Come down; can't you do somethin'? Fix me?"
"I don't understand you. What do you mean?"
"I done it; I got up the applause and furory, I did."
"What! Why, the applause was the hearty outburst of a spontaneous enthusiasm."
"Yes; I know, but I got up the spontaneous enthusiasm, yer know;" pointing with his thumb to the gods who rule on high, as it were. But the other man didn't "fix" him just then. He, however, deputed a friend to attend to the little affair, and for that purpose the friend tipped a ten spot to the man of rattan proclivities. And so the same wild enthusiasm was exhibited for three or four nights longer, and then the officer once more sought out the other chap and spake these solemn words:
"Kept up the shake big, didn't I? Immense applause to-night! I'm out! Fix me again?"
"Fix you? What is it you mean?"
"Money don't last always, yer know. I'm run short again. If yer want spontaneous approbation to be kept up, you must come down; keep up the spons, yer know."
"I know nothing about your spontaneous applause."
"Well, all right. If yer don't 'fix' me, I'll fix her, you bet."
He wasn't "fixed," so the next night the female trapezeist performed her thrilling acts "without a hand." The same thing occurred on the succeeding night—no spontaneous outburst, no tumultuous approval; and as she went to the dressing-room, she wept scalding tears, and even wished that she were dead. Her husband and protector held close communion with the manager, told of the blackmailing operation, and intimated that the officer had stopped the applause. Then the manager called this mutual friend, saw him, and having divested him of the rattan, his insignia of office, gave utterance to these thrilling words: "Never more be officer of mine!" And the latter went forth, like Cain, with the brand of guilt upon his hitherto bright escutcheon. His salary was six dollars per week. He is now a conductor on a railroad car, working sixteen hours each day, and finding himself. The spontaneous applause is not so excessive as it used to be. Another terrible instance of how vaulting ambition may overleap itself and fetch up on the other track.....Talking of this strange, eventful history, reminds us of the latest works in press, viz., "On the Cord," by Blondin, a sequel to "Off the Line," and "Rope and Wrinkle," by the author of "Cord and Creese."..... We are lonely to-day, for Charlotte said her last farewell on Saturday night last, in Boston. She disclaims having made her farewell in New York; she was compelled to that act by others addicted to pecuniary caucuses; but her farewell forever, in Boston, was in her very volunteer act. We shall never see her more, probably. And yet we have just read a letter from Charlotte, in which she says: "I have made my last appearance on the stage—on my own account." The italics are ours. In these four little words there is a mystery and a hidden meaning that thrills the soul with joy. She will come again, on account of others.....And so the same wild and successful traveler [Oh, no, Jimmy, not Weston—we said successful traveler] who quietly notified us, in advance of all other papers, that the city of Rome is overrun with ants. [Yes, New York is pretty well filled with uncles, but they are kept in check by pawns in the ante-rooms.] This is the case of Rome, ants, and Booth's Theatre! Take your hook and line, I am to sweep them away.....Those "beautiful creatures," Rignold and Montague, will, at the close of the regular season, appear as the two off-uns! Then may we exclaim, "Mother, is the old Home Lonely?".....We are happy. "Jim Bludsoe" is here, and will show up all of Nobles' shows at this week, in the person of Milton Nobles. In this Bludsoe play we are to see the stain of blood. Thus will Nobles oblige..... The intelligence comes to us from the Pacific slope that Titus and Allison have appeared together in hostile attitude; that Titus got on to Allison's nose, with effect, all owing to a fresh mash of Oates! that the stability of this union is fearfully endangered, and that lawyers are engaged in posting each other. Our Jim says that a well-ordained agent ought to keep both himself and his bills "well posted."

LINES ON A MARRIED BILLPOSTER, RETIRED.

He thinks more of board bills than bill boards now,
Of his wife and children he's in earning;
He'll handle no cuts but the butcher's own;
For he's left off billing and gone to scouring.

The profession and the family circle remind you of "Scenes on the Front-tier?" as delineated by Buffalo William and the Pale Dove?.....Harry Mack, who is traveling with the Helen D'Este troupe down South, sends to us from Yazoo City, Miss., some magnolia buds and tea roses, to let us know what luxuries they are enjoying in the sunny South. Without wishing to take advantage of the well-meant intentions of the sunny South, we would respectfully intimate to Harry Mack that up here in the shady North we have been luxuriating in such things all Winter; and though we may not have had any magnolias, we have reveled in snowballs and ice plants. Yes, yes, I.....Quite a number of birds of song are already singing their way to the sunny Italy. My gracious! And yet, isn't it dangerous to sing in that country, where even the greatest vocal favorites are met by bravos and hussars!.....It has been discovered, since the circus caravan started on its Summer travels, that oriental gymnasts perform their feats with Japan-ese. Also, that the "tattooed chiefs of New Zealand" display new zeal and ability every day, with evident marks of gratification. This is true.....Our Jim," having learned that Edwin Adams has purchased "On the Rhine," by Bartley Campbell, expresses a hope that the play will bring on the "rhein," and that he will be immediately Bartley successful! James would like to know whether or not, in case Edwin should form a company for the express purpose of supporting him, it would be considered an opposition to the other Adams' Express Company.....We have a very poor opinion of that dissolute actor who, when we politely inquired how he was, impudently replied that he was a foe-to-graphic art!.....As an evidence that the miniature bricks Mr. Daly intends to use in building up his centennial are real silver, he assures us that each brick is to be stamped by the maker. That is all very well as far as it goes, but what the public want to know is, who will stamp the maker? And this is not intended for a brick kiln, either.....And now that we are i' the vein, let us confidentially inquire of our readers why a stiff breeze blowing against Col. Sellers when he is crossing the ocean would remind you of a pretty and talented actress, late of Booth's Theatre? Take your time, readers, and don't imagine that you are diving into a free lunch. This is the well-prepared and duly-considered solution to this erratic puzzle: Because it would be a gust to Raymond [Augusta Raymond—ED. CLIP.]..... Clara Morris may be able to get over "Macbeth" because of the Bridges in it. [Don't make it any longer? Got enough up there? All right.]

CITY SUMMARY.

MISS KATE FISHER and her horse Wonder were seen in "Mazeppa" at Wood's Museum during the past week, at the evening performances and at the Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Frequent repetition of this familiar drama by this lady and her equine assistant precludes the necessity of an extended review of their merits. At the other matinees the stock company were advantageously seen in "Waiting for the Verdict," which, however, had no allusion to the "little affair" now engrossing the attention of the public in a sister city.

THE NEW ORLEANS OPERA HOUSE MINSTRELS, now sole masters of the field, are doing a satisfactory business at their Opera-house. Two hours of mirth and song satisfy the cravings of that portion of our community who are fond of this kind of amusement. "Sadie Ray," sung by A. H. Pelham, was the sole change in the programme since our last report.

THE FIRST PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION of "The Big Bonanza" at the Fifth-avenue Theatre is to be given May 24, when the price of reserved chairs will be raised to $2 each; and as an offset to this, every lady visiting the theatre is to be presented with a miniature brick of real silver. Attendance good during the past week, at the Wednesday matinee the Almee Opera Troupe in "La Jolie Parfumeuse," and at the Saturday matinee the Lina Mayr German-opera Troupe in "La Fille de Mme. Angot," preceded selections from "The Big Bonanza."

THE TWENTY-THIRD MATINEE of "The Two Orphans" was given at the Union-square Theatre on May 15, and in the evening the one hundred and forty-second performance of that drama took place. The large attendance continues undiminished. Do not forget Stuart Robson's benefit at this theatre on Thursday afternoon, May 20, when an entire change of programme, and a very attractive one, will be offered.

JOHN T. RAYMOND intends sailing for Europe on June 1, returning early in August, to begin a short season at the Union-square Theatre.

PRUDIE COLE is to give dramatic recitals, under the direction of J. E. Frobisher, at Association Hall, on Thursday evening, May 20.

HARRIGAN AND HART made their last appearance this season at the Theatre Comique on the evening of May 15. The fresh appearances on May 17 were Adah Richmond—after a brief absence—whose serio-comic songs were received with manifestations of delight; the Deveres—William, Laura and Thomas—who did an excellent statue-clog dance; and the Lorella Brothers, who were again seen in their agile and difficult acrobatic feats. During the week several of the sketches were changed nightly. The attendance was large.

EMERSON'S MINSTRELS will commence a season at the Park Theatre on May 30.

THE NOVELTIES at the Bowery Opera-house during the expired week included the first appearance of Ella Arlington, a pleasing serio-comic, and Bryant and Anderson, who gave satisfaction as musical mokes. Mons. A. Blandowski produced a new ballet called "The Parisian Grisettes," which was greeted with liberal applause. Buffalo Bill and Kit Carson acted in "The Scouts of the Plains," in which G. C. Davenport made his first appearance here as Ebenezer Longbrains. Business good.

THEODORE HAMILTON, business manager of the Varieties Theatre, New Orleans, La., and manager of John E. Owens' traveling dramatic company, arrived in town May 12.

MUSICAL NOTES.—Lecocq's opera-bouffe of "Girofle-Girofla" received a rendition in German at the Germania Theatre May 10, Miss Lina Mayr vocalizing in the attractive role of the sisters Girofle-Girofla.....G. W. Morgan, organist, and Miss Wilhelmina Benziger, soprano, were the interpreters of the programme of the twenty-sixth grand organ concert of the Church of the Holy Trinity on Wednesday afternoon, May 12.....Mlle. Aimee and a portion of the company recently performing at the Lyceum Theatre, among whom were Mlle. Gandon and M. DeBeer, sailed for Europe in the L'Amerique on May 15.....Miss Clara Fisher will sustain the title-role in the English version of "Girofle-Girofla" to be produced at Robinson Hall on Wednesday, May 19.....Flotow's opera of "L'Ombre," in the original French, will be given at the Park Theatre on Tuesday evening, May 18, for the benefit of the Home for the Blind.....Gilmore's Concert Garden, late Barnum's Hippodrome, will be opened to the public at the completion of the extensive alterations which are now being made. The musical entertainment to be given will have as its especial feature the performances of Gilmore's band of one hundred performers, including some of the best soloists in this country, and will afford opportunities for listening to the best of orchestral interpretations combined with the most attractive surroundings.

ELEANOR HOWARD, a pupil of Miss E. V. Proudfoot, is to make her debut on the dramatic stage at the Park Theatre on Saturday evening, May 22, acting Bianca in "Fazio." Ben A. Baker will be the stage-manager upon that occasion, he having closed his season at Wood's Museum, Philadelphia, on May 8, and returned to this city.

GERALDINE STUART arrived from Kingston, Jamaica, by the steamer of the 14th inst.

FRANK KERNS has returned from the South. He is looking greatly improved in health.

MISS CLARA MORRIS began an engagement at Booth's Theatre on May 10, acting Evadne in Richard Shiel's tragic play, in five acts, of the same name. The play was handsomely mounted, and the costumes tasteful. Miss Morris may be said to have achieved a fair success in her performance of this character for the first time before a metropolitan audience. Numerous faults were noticeable; but possibly these were overbalanced by the many beauties of conception and embodiment she displayed. In trying to avoid the stilted and declamatory style of the old school, she at times overshot the mark and fell into the conversational style of the modern society drama. Particularly was this noticeable in the statue scene in the last act, which affords fine scope for declamation. In this instance she lacked power, and there was a wavering in her voice, and, instead of working up a thrilling dramatic climax, her lack of passion and intensity caused the ending to be somewhat tame. To be natural upon the stage is a great desideratum, but there is a vast difference in strictly adhering to nature in the method of portraying the dignity of a king or the gaucheries of a peasant. There are actors who carry their personal idiosyncracies with them to the stage, and no matter what characters they may be called upon to impersonate; and although they may be correctly costumed and the features well made up, yet the first words they utter betray their personal identity. Because they deliver their lines in the natural and colloquial style of the drawing-room, they claim to be exponents of the natural school of acting. Although this style may succeed at times in comedy, it will not answer for tragedy, for the latter is ever surrounded with an air of grandeur, and its language is grandiloquent. A single step brings us from tragedy to melodrama, and but another to burlesque. In the earlier scenes of the play, in the interviews with Colonna and Vicentio, little tragic power was required, and in these Miss Morris gave complete satisfaction. Her parting with her lover, at the end of the third act, was excellently acted, and gained her a call before the curtain. Her greatest fault was that she did not convey the idea to the audience that she was acting tragedy, but that she was endeavoring to portray the various passions excited by the dialogue according to the method of the modern emotional drama. An improvement was noticeable in her general acting towards the close of the week. George Clarke, who made his first appearance here, acted Vicentio quite acceptably, and appeared to better advantage than he had been hitherto seen for some time. F. B. Warde deserves credit for the care and attention he bestowed upon Colonna, and for his endeavors to please; and as it was, probably, his first performance of the role, he should not be criticized too closely. J. B. Studley made an excellent Ludovico, bringing out all the salient features of the character in a strong light, and acting with a quiet intensity which elicited the approval of the audience. George Morton, who, we believe, made his metropolitan debut, has a good voice and appearance, and read his lines intelligently; but his performance was considerably marred by stagefright. Time and her A few months' practice in a good school would, however, correct this fault. W. B. Bradley was satisfactory as Spalatro; and Miss Blanche Grey should be specially engaged to act Olivia, quite artistically did what little was required of her. It should be mentioned that one of the principal scenes in her original part was on this occasion eliminated. The attendance was good. On Thursday afternoon Joseph H. Tooker, the business manager, received a benefit, when the programme included "Blackeyed Susan," acted by George Rignold and the stock company; "The Yankee Housekeeper," with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Florence as the principal acters; the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," by H. J. Montague and Miss Neilson, the latter then taking her farewell of the American public; Harrigan and Hart in "Patrick's-day Parade;" and "Nan the Good-for-nothing," with Bijou Heron, James Lewis and other members of the Fifth-avenue Theatre company in the cast. The auditorium was well filled.

THE GRAND OPERA-HOUSE was reopened, under the business management of Comly & Burdick, on Saturday evening, May 15, when Joseph C. Foster's drama of "The Twelve Temptations," which had a long run at this theatre some few years ago, was revived. The night was a benefit night for the treasurer, and the auditorium were comfortably filled, and the gallery was crowded. The piece was admirably mounted, and the costumes and properties originally used had been reproduced in a style of magnificence. There was a fair ballet-corps under the direction of Mme. Kathi Danner, but there were no premieres, nor on the occasion any specialties introduced; but this week Little Fay Templeton, Prof. Nelson and sons, and J. L. Davis and his troupe of educated dogs are to appear. The opportunities for acting were confined to few persons. Joseph F. Wheelock gave a vigorous portrayal of Ulric; James Collins acted Retreuse, although the name of Charles Stanley appeared in the bill as the representative of that character. The boys in the gallery quickly recognized Mr. Collins, and gave him a warm reception. He introduced a medley song, which took immensely and was loudly redemanded. Miss Henrietta Irving acted Jannette with spirit, and Lillie Andrews, who has a good soprano voice, sang, with much effect, "Sweet Spirit, Hear my Prayer." The other characters were satisfactorily performed. Wm. Withers, Jr., has charge of the musical department.

THE WESTON SISTERS—Flora and Jennie—accompanied by their sister Emma, sailed for Europe, per the C. Ibic, on May 15.

THE ORIGINAL ROBERT MACAIRE Bryant's Minstrels, now under the management of Neil Bryant, the sole survivor of the three brothers who originally organized the company, are to perform for one night only at the Academy of Music, on May 29, when a strong bill will be presented by a powerful company.

W. A. HAYNES, the treasurer of the San Francisco Minstrels, is to remain in this city for a few days. Having been attentive to his duties and courteous to the patrons of this company, he deserves a large attendance.

THE KIRALFY BROTHERS, through their agent, Mr. Gerson, have closed a contract, extending over a period of three years, with Weinschenk & Co., manager of the Theatre Ambigu, Paris, France, by which the latter agrees to furnish the former with copies of all pieces, including operas, opera-bouffes, etc., which may be produced at his theatre; also to furnish the original costumes and properties, or duplicates thereof. The first piece to be produced under their joint management will be "Le Tour du Monde," which will be brought out at the Academy of Music about the middle of August. The scenery, costumes, properties and appointments used upon its original production will be transported hither.

JOHN BROUGHAM and Miss Ada Dyas are to perform at Mrs. Gilbert's matinee benefit at the Fifth-avenue Theatre on May 20.

THE FRESH APPEARANCES at the Theatre Comique this week will include Barney and Rickey, Cool Burgess, King Sarbro, J. H. McKee, Carroll and Harris, the Conway Brothers, and Jennie Hughes.

OFF FOR EUROPE.—The following well-known professionals sailed for Europe on May 15: In the Ameriqui, for Havre, France, Mlle. Marie Aimee, Henri Grivi Smart and Mr. Giraudin; and Teresa Antonino; in the Celtic, for Liverpool, Eng., Miss Adelaide Neilson; in the England, for Liverpool, Frank Angell, Harry Rickards, Mlle. Lottie De Aste, and Mlle. Katrina.

JOHN S. CLARKE, we are informed, will be manager of the Park Theatre next season.

THE FRAN ILLO BELLRINGERS (W. B. Blaisdell's party) opens at Wallack's Theatre on May 31 in the variety scene in the play of "The Donnovans." Charles Austin and wife in lightning-drill act, Professor and Baby Bindley, and Nelly St. John, vocalist, have also been engaged.

COL. T. ALSTON BROWN, dramatic agent, 9 West Fourth street, states through our advertising department that Carrie Dalton, leading juveniles, and Paul Martinetti and troupe can be engaged.

FREQUENT CHANGES are made in the attractions at the Olympic Theatre, and a large number of performers are seen in their special acts. An enumerated list of fresh appearances may be found in our advertising columns.

JOS. JEFFERSON will sail for Europe on June 30.

MLLE. AIMEE'S farewell appearances at the Lyceum Theatre during the past week presented her in the sparkling characterization of Rose Michon in "La Jolie Parfumeuse" on Monday, May 10; Marguerite, in "Le Petit Faust," on Tuesday; Clairette, in "La Fille de Mme. Angot," Wednesday; Clotilde, in "La Perichole," Thursday; and at her benefit, on Friday, as Lischen in Offenbach's operetta of "Lischen et Fritschen," followed by the second act of "La Jolie Parfumeuse," the bill concluding with a rendition of the comedy vaudeville of "La Femme aux Œufs d'Or," the beneficiary sustaining the role of Rosita in the latter performance on Saturday afternoon's engagement, and will be her last appearance before a New York audience for a lengthened period, as she contemplates remaining in Europe for several years. "Girofle-Girofla" was produced at this house on Saturday evening with the same cast, including Miles. Geoffrey, Minelli, M De Querey and others, as at its former production. The week Theatre, and will continue the attraction during this week. The theatre closes for the season May 29.

LANE & WEAVER, variety, dramatic and general professional agents, advertise for a capitalist to manage a star; they also want three serio-comic vocalists and two song-and-dance ladies, and offer the side-show and other privileges with Stowe's Circus for rental.

JOHN L. SANFORD, dramatic and professional agent, advertises Miss Kate Waldron, second old woman and character actress, and King Sarbro, Japanese specialty artist, as being open for engagements. He also desires to secure first-class song-and-dance men, specialty artists, vocalists, and musicians for W. W. Newcomb's Show noticed in his card elsewhere.

ROBERT JOHNSON and George H. Cheever made application to Judge Hunt of the United States Circuit Court, on May 17, for an injunction to restrain Messrs. Shook and Palmer from longer performing "The Two Orphans," on the ground that they are the rightful owners of the drama. An order was granted returnable June 1, to show cause why the injunction should not be granted.

THE CASE OF BOUCICAULT VS. HART came up in the United States Circuit Court May 17, before Judge Hunt. An argument was had to dismiss the bill. The Court took the papers, and reserved its decision.

JUDGE LAWRENCE, in the Supreme Court Chambers, on May 17, granted a temporary injunction against Adolphe Neuendorf, proprietor of the Germania Theatre, restraining him from giving further performances until the customary license has been paid.

DRAMATIC.

W. C. POPE opened at the Adelphi Theatre, Detroit, Mich., May 10, as Belphegor, supported by his new company, to a fair house, which has increased each night during the week. Mr. Pope gave us a fine bit of acting, his reading being especially noticeable; Miss Henrietta Vaders, as Madeline, soon convinced the audience that she was an actress of no common ability; her stage presence, wardrobe, and beauty going far to enhance each scene. The rest of the cast were as good as the average of small companies, and included C. W. Howell, J. L. Burdetto, W. E. Guy, Frank Melrose, Fred Avery, J. A. Thompson, Richard Neville, Viola and Lillie Aldine, Miss J. McMillan, La Petite Davise, and Master Harry. The season closes with a matinee 15, the company going to Chatham, Ont., 17, thence to London, Hamilton, etc. Advices of May 15.

T. J. HERNDON'S DRAMATIC COMPANY performed during the past week at Ottawa, Ont., and are to continue this.

C. D. BAINBRIDGE of the Academy of Music, Buffalo, N. Y., is at his home in Elmira, N. Y. He has been re-engaged for next season at Buffalo for juvenile business.

FROM CHICAGO, ILL., our advices, dated May 14, are as follows: "With the enormous crowds of people that have been flocking into the city during the present week to attend the soldiers' reunion that is now in full blast, it was to be expected that the several places of local amusement would be benefited thereby. We are pleased to state that our anticipations in this direction have been fully realized, and at the close of the week the box sheets will boom up brilliantly. Mrs. F. W. Lander has been the reigning queen of tragedy at the Academy of Music, and for once, at least, her efforts have been rewarded by not only large, but thoroughly appreciative audiences. During the week she has been honored by the presence of many

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Washington, D. C., the new appearances May 10 were John McMahon and Homer Lane, wrestlers; Miss Annie Morgan, vocalist; Cotton and Birdue, in songs-and-dances; Miss Maggie Walton, Miss Alice Ross, and Ed. Murray. The wrestling of Messrs. McMahon and Lane is deserving of mention as being an attractive feature; the same may be said of Frank Mara's dancing. The departures May 15 were Miss Winnetta Montague, Miss Maggie Walton, Edwin F. Barnes, Miss Alice Ross, Ed. Murray, Miss Annie Morgan, John McMahon, Homer Lane, Prof. Carlyle and son, Dave Walling and Frank Mara. The Summer Theatre will open 17th with an entire new company, excepting Jake Budd, Alf. McDowell, Cotton and Birdue, and Willie Howard, who are retained. During the warm weather this should prove an "attractive resort....." At the Avenue Theatre the attendance continues fair. Miss Lottie Arnett, Miss Patti Rosa and Bob Scott were the only new appearances May 10. The departures May 15 were William and Sadie Hasson, to the Odeon, Baltimore; Patti Rosa and Bob Scott, to Toledo, for the 24th; Miss Laura Bernard and Jessie Howard, to Richmond; and Chas. T. Ellis to Fox's, Philadelphia. The announcements for the 17th are the Faust Family, Mlle. Zoe Zeonetti and Mons. Reveni, gymnasts; Miss Minnie Rainforth, lightning Zouave-drill performer and vocalist; Miss Louisa Bliss, songs-and-dances; Miss Katie Freeman, general performer; and Charley Howard, who, as previously announced, enters upon his duties as stage-manager. Advices of May 16.

THE AUDIENCES the past week at Theatre Comique, Providence, R. I., were, on an average, good. The new people May 10 were Cool Burgess, who took the audiences by storm; Logrenia the wizard, whose trained birds and mice are really wonderful; Mr. and Mrs. George Ware, who possess well-trained voices and give excellent satisfaction in their solos and duets; the Dalys, a trio who are nightly encored in their songs-and-dances; the Carter Boys, two little fellows who give the complete Zouave drill with a finish that would become many veterans; and Harry Blanchard, the double-voiced vocalist, who well satisfied his hearers. John Murray appeared in "The Irish Emigrant." The departures 15 were Cool Burgess and Logrenia to New York, the Wares to Albany, the Dalys to join Harry Bloodgood's party. Announced to open 17; The Æolian Quartet, Billy Gray, Billy Carroll, the Wilson Sisters and James Roach. .....Isidore's Varieties, with its lady waiters, continues to attract a goodly number of people. Prof. Lolo the fire-eater, and Master Willie Fox were last week's additions. Both good. Advices of May 16.

THE ODEON COMPANY, Newark, N. J., on May 15 closed their regular season by giving a performance at the Opera-house. The several people connected as follows: Billy Ashcroft and Kitty Brook, of Philadelphia, Rickey and Barney to New York, the Arnold Bros. to Front-street, Baltimore, Nellie St. John to the Howard Athenæum, Boston, King Barbo and Prof. Nelson and Miss Annie Morgan, to New York. The audiences at the Metropolitan have not diminished in either size or appreciation. No departures. The present large company is to be augumented on 17 by the addition of J. B. Johnson, "champion swimmer of the world!;" Herr A. Schulze, the man with many faces; Fred. Marshall and Agnes Sutherland. On the 17th and 18th Mr. Waldman takes his company to the Rink for the purpose of allowing the "Boissets" to do some acts that the size of his place will not admit of, and each one after doing his turn returning to the Metropolitan, thus giving two shows in one evening and with the same people. Advices of May 15.

THE GREAT ADELPHI THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., continues to attract large audiences. Chas. Foster made his first appearance on May 10, and produced for the first time in this city his original drama entitled "Twenty Years, or the Twins." The drama is sensational, neatly mounted, and has drawn well. Miss Addie Langdon is creating a fine impression. The other new appearances were Dunbar and Montana, acceptable horizontal-bar performers; Harry Gurr, man-fish; and William Sparkes the modern Hercules. Billy Courtright has made a hit in his specialties, while Wash Norton is excellent in his burlesque ballads. The double-act by Courtright and Norton, called "Only Friend," is immense. Cotton and Birdue, Sid. C. France and Bobby Daily are to open 17. Canfield and Booker close May 15, and will sail for Europe next (this) week. Advices of May 15.

AT THE ADELPHI, Pesria, Ill., business continues excellent. The only new arrival May 10 was Miss Mary Olive, an excellent serio-comic singer and song-and-dance artist. On May 6 Wm. Scott of Scott and Forrest, clog-dancers, was married to Miss Minnie Chapin, a non-professional. The new people for 17 are Chas. H. King, Chas. Eccles, Postelle, Ettie May, the Deborge Sisters, the Nelson Sisters and Flora Macdonald. Departures 15: Bobby Daily and Lulu McCloud to St. Louis, and Minnie Miller to Indianapolis.

THE GRAND CENTRAL, Philadelphia, drew full houses last week, with the Richmond Sisters, J. H. Larkin, Carrie Armstrong, Lina Edwin and Bland Holt. Prof. J. L. Davis and his troupe of trained dogs concluded their engagement May 15. This week Miss Winnetta Montague and James M. Ward perform in the sensational play "Through by Daylight." Miss Annie Morgan, Harry Helmer, Charley Reynolds and Miss Ida Morris are also in the week's programme."

THE SWEET & THORNTON'S LADY MINSTRELS show at Worcester, Mass., May 19; Woonsocket, R. I., 20, 21; Milford, Mass., 22; Westboro, 24, 25.

A. S. AUSTIN, general agent, with Sweet & Thornton's Lady Minstrels, can be addressed care of this office.

VARIETY ARTISTS and bar performers are wanted for Woodward's London Comique Company. Address Lew Woodward, as per card elsewhere.

MINNIE RAINFORTH, lightning Zouave drillist and serio-comic vocalist, advertises for engagements for the season of 1875-6.

CHAS. VIVIAN has broken up his company, and is residing himself on a ranche near Los Angeles.

LARGE HOUSES were in order at the Adelphi, Albany, N. Y., the past week, which may be set down as the most prosperous, pecuniarily speaking, of the season. The fresh faces appearing on May 10 were J. H. and May McBride, the Waite Sisters, the Irwin Sisters, and Aubrey and King. J. H. McBride, formerly known as Joe Mack, is an old favorite in the city. He received quite an enthusiastic reception, and exhibited his comic powers in a number of negro farces. May McBride possesses a voice of ordinary compass, which was heard to advantage in songs of the day. The Waite Sisters please, in the burlesque entitled "Cinderella," and "Two Roses." The Irwin Sisters, apparently are novices, but deserve encouragement for the manner in which they acquitted themselves. Aubrey and King, gymnasts, performed several aerial feats in a satisfactory manner. Those closing May 15 were the Waite Sisters, Billy McAllister, and Carrie Lavarnie, to Acker's new theatre, Troy, and Fitzgerald and Ryan to the Bijou Opera-house, New York. The announcements 17 comprise Mr. and Mrs. George Ware, Houshaw and Evans, and Hawley and Phillips. Advices of May 16.

IT IS THE OLD, stereotyped news from Detroit, Mich, in regard to business at the Theatre Comique—crowded houses. A female-minstrel scene was the attraction for this week, May 10, in addition to Miss Helene, Ella Arnold and the Claire Sisters. Miss Helene appeared to advantage in a medley dance. Ella Arnold sang here but a few weeks ago. The Claire Sisters stand unrivaled as contortionists, and Miss Maggie in her flying rings was better than ever. Being a resident of Detroit, they were warmly welcomed. Closing the 15th are Gilday and Gineven for Rochester, Harry Watson and Lizzie Sherman. On 17 come the Snow Brothers, Johnny Bowman, Lottie Brown, Gus Peters and Mlle. Annetta. Saturday nights are devoted, as usual, to the lady audiences, at the company performing at the Adelphi Theatre. Correspondence of May 15.

THE NEW ARRIVALS at the Theatre Comique, Toledo, O., May 10, were Thomas and Lottie Winnett, in a double-jig and Dutch songs-and-dances; Frank Bell, in negro specialties; Johnny Booker, an old favorite; and Miss Kate Harvey, in fancy dances. Seamon and Somers and Minnie Seamon closed May 15. Jennie Leslie closed same date and goes to Bay City. The Wrays, George and Lizzie, were billed for May 10, but failed to arrive, offering no explanation. Capt. John Smith Mason, McKee and Ryland, Anno Fox, Frank Carlton and Maria Nichols open May 17. Fannie Kent was presented with an elegant silk umbrella, with a massive gold-chased handle, inscribed "Fannie, from C ——," at Saginaw, a short time ago; she is visiting in Toledo, O., at present, and is to open in Indianapolis May 24. Letter of May 16.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Rochester, N. Y., business was fair the past week. Ben Dodge, the De Lave Troupe, Gilmore and Smith, and Mlle. Antoinette Kurtz closed May 15. Gilday and Gineven, the Golden Family, and Fitzgerald Ryan commence 17.

MISS EMODLINE ESOCLEW, while performing at Miller's Winter Garden, Philadelphia, Pa., on May 15, was presented by a number of her friends and admirers with a gold medal. Ed. Banker made the presentation speech.

THE COMPANY at the Theatre Comique, Cleveland, O., remained the same as in the previous week. On May 7, at Prof. Harrison's benefit, he was presented with a beautiful gold-headed cane by his friends in the company. He withdrew on the 13th. The departures 15 were H. W. Eagan, Josie Farron, Jennie Eagan and the Harrison Sisters to Indianapolis, Wesleys and Frankie Casey to Cincinnati, and the Clark Brothers, destination not given. Business averages fair.

TONY PASTOR and company performed at Brainard's Opera-house, Cleveland, O., 14, 15, to overflowing houses, giving a matinee on the latter day.

AT THE VARIETIES, Norfolk, Va., Clara May commenced May 10. Saltie King and La Petite Clara are billed for 17, Scheffer and Nelson 18.

THE FRAEGER FAMILY, Tyrolean vocalists, with specialties, are at present performing at Indianapolis, Ind., where they can be addressed.

MISS EDNA MARKLEY, serio-comic vocalist, now engaged at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, can be secured for vacant dates through her agent, Sig. Vallo, who advertises.

THE FRENCH TWIN SISTERS, song-and-dance artists, etc., now performing in Canada, have open dates from May 31 to June 4. Their address and complimentary notices from the Montreal, Canada, press can be found in their card in another column.

PRESCOTT AND TRAVIS, in their Ethiopian specialties, can be engaged by addressing as per card.

MME. BLANCHE and her troupe of ladies, in their tableaux vivants entertainment, who have recently been performing at Robinson Hall, this city, are open for engagements. Managers having open dates can address their agents, Simmonds & Wall, as per advertisement.

ANOTHER WEEK of good houses at Col. Sinn's New Park Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I. "Darky's Stratagem," an Ethiopian sketch, commenced the entertainment. Miss Sallie Adams, with her many different musical instruments, the capital songs-and-dances of Smith and Waldron, and Sam Villa's impersonations of female characters were the features. The burlesque of "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," in which the Worrell Sisters appear with Sam Villa, Jennings, Edwards, Lamb, and others, closed the entertainment. No new faces for May 17.

HARRISON & HARP'S popular songs are published by Wm. A. Pond & Co., this city, who advertise the list and prices, and musical merchandise of every description.

GEORGE REYNOLDS, one of the Reynolds Brothers, song-and-dance men, performing at the Adelphi Theatre, Chicago, Ill., on Thursday morning, May 13, became involved in a quarrel with one Harry Sinclair, a well-known "sport," and after a few rounds a bruce was proclaimed, and both parties went on a stroll about town at the early hour of 4 A. M. When in the street, Sinclair drew a knife and stabbed Reynolds over the eye, making a deep and serious wound, although it is thought that he will recover.

PROF. H. M. PARKER states, through our business department, that the precarious state of his health has compelled him to cancel his engagement with McEvilie, Magginley & Cooke's Circus; but he is prepared to accept engagements to perform his educated dogs in first-class variety theatres.

FRANK J. LENOY, male soprano and change artist, directs all communications to be sent as per card.

HARRY KENNEDY, ventriloquist, publishes in another column commendatory notices from the press on his performances, and informs managers of his next open date.

BRYANT'S MINSTRELS in their second and last week at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., have been quite successful, their songs, jokes, and oddities in the first part having proved most pleasing. In the second part, Jennie Hughes, Walters and Morton, and Harry Bloodgood have continued from last week, and the new arrivals have been Delehanty and Hengler, who, among other things, have given their familiar "Tricks in Love"; the Lillian Sisters, who have proved quite attractive, and the juggler Norton, whose act is a capital one, and who shows great skill and grace in his various feats. All close to-night, and on Monday Harrigan and Hart open in "The Doyle Brothers." Bryant's Minstrels are to travel, appearing at Music Hall, Lynn, May 17, Mechanics' Hall, Salem, 18, and Music Hall, Lowell, 19.....The Boylston Museum has made no change in its company from that announced last week. It continues to give three performances daily, and meets with fair success. Advices of May 15.

SIDNEY C. FRANCE, an actor favorably known there from his connection with the old Opera-house in its palmy days, commenced an engagement at the Vandeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., on May 10, in "Marked for Life," and, says our correspondent, "has proved a very attractive card, so much so that up to the present time not even standing-room has been procurable after eight o'clock. The drama is splendidly put upon the stage, and contains a locomotive scene that is really fine. France is an actor of merit, and his Skid was a well-studied and careful performance. Mr. Lipman, who doubled the parts of Hiram Whitby and Sr. Holton, is deserving of praise, both for his make-up and acting. Edgell and Hays were the only new variety artists on the 10th, and their acrobatic songs-and-dances would have been better appreciated had the audience not been surfeited with similar artists of late. Sidney C. France closes on the 15th, and departs for Chicago. Flora McDonald and Minnie Gray depart same date for Indianapolis. Lizzie Graham, Mlle. Lui, Nellie McDonald and Zella Howard are underlined for the 17th."

AT THE NATIONAL THEATRE COMIQUE, Cincinnati, O., writes our correspondent on the 14th inst., the new people this week have been Goss and Fox and the Barlow Brothers. Both these pairs of performers have been heretofore noticed as standing in the front rank of the song-and-dance branch of the profession, the Barlows being also excellent clog-dancers. Besides these, the programme has embraced the specialties of E. M. Hall, Capt. Henry S. Page, Mark Hughes, Charley Armstrong, Willis Pickert, El Nino Eddie, John Shay and Polly Daly. Ella Warner, vocalist, has been too ill to sing this week, but will reappear Monday. The departures to-morrow will be E. M. Hall, to join Bryant's Minstrels in Boston; Henry S. Page and Polly Daly, to New York; Willis Pickert and John Williams, for St. Louis; and El Nino Eddie. The new people next week will consist entirely of those returning from the "Black Crook" combination, namely: Rose Lee, the Herd Sisters, Nat Hyams, James Douglass and W. N. Compston.

VARIETY CARDS are wanted at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the week commencing June 7. Address Chas. T. Ellis, as per card elsewhere.

MAGGIE RENTZ'S FEMALE MINSTRELS will close a successful season of sixty-five weeks on June 5. Route: Sherbrooke, P. Q., May 17, Lewiston, Me., 18, Portland 19, 20, Biddeford 21, Manchester, N. H., 22.

DAVIS & CO., theatrical agents, Cincinnati, O., who advertise, want to engage a lady vocalist and pianist, and state that they can procure artists engagements with traveling companies.

FIRST-CLASS ARTISTS desiring engagements at the Theatre Comique, St. Louis, Mo., are referred to the manager's advertisement.

JENNIE ENGLE, Harris and Carroll, Kitty Henderson, Geo. Leo, Wm. Moore, Harry Herring and T. J. Martin were the newcomers at Trimble's Varieties Theatre, Pittsburg, Pa., on May 10. The singing of Miss Engle was received with much favor. Harris and Carroll's acting, singing and dancing were deserving of praise. Miss Henderson's clog-hornpipe was redemanded, and she and Mr. Moore made a good impression in their specialty of "The Sangerfest Parade." The drama of "The Tigress of the West" closed the entertainment, Miss Herring and Mr. Martin satisfactorily impersonating the principal characters. Minnie Rainforth, I believe, goes to Buffalo next week, and Harris and Carroll to New York. Lillie Prado, Elma Wilson, Alice Bateman, Charles Benedict and Robt. Ferguson commence on May 17. Tony Pastor's company play for three nights and one matinee at Library Hall, opening on the 17th. Correspondence of May 14.

CARRIE WOODS, who recently concluded an engagement at the Theatre Comique, Richmond, Va., is under the management of and booked by the proprietor in a letter published in our advertising department.

WM. COURTRIGHT, character artist, is at present performing at the Adelphi, Chicago, Ill.

AT BARTON OPERA-HOUSE, SYRACUSE, N. Y., the present season will close on May 22, and the company, under the management of W. B. Smith, will afterward open at Maynard Opera-house, Oswego, for a short season, until the new opera-house in Syracuse is completed. Mr. Smith inserts a card requesting performers to govern themselves accordingly.

AT THE ODEON, Baltimore, Md., the new features on May 10 were Tim Morris, a good exponent of the old plantation darky; La Pauline, a pretty and sprightly bareback equestrienne; Ella Medlin, a clever song-and-dance lady. The departures on the 15th were Dick Smith, Fanny Davenport, Kitty Loveland, Carrie Woods, Johnny Loveland, Louisa Bliss and Dody Zanfretta. To open May 17; Billy Hasson, Sadie Hasson, Minnie Baker and the Kine Brothers. Business continues good.

MISS BELLE IFERD (as she is professionally known) obtained on May 6, in the Circuit Court No. 4, St. Louis, Mo., a decree of divorce from Irwin Matthews, alias E. S. Miller, violinist, for adultery with one Carrie Woods. The decree also restores her maiden name.

THE HEYWOOD BROTHERS' COMBINATION is to perform at Oswego, N. Y., May 17, Fulton 18, Syracuse 20. G. N. WOLTZ of Sunbury, Pa., will please send to this office the information to which he refers in his letter of May 8, giving full particulars.

KING SAKMO, Japanese slack-rope performer, can be engaged by addressing him as per advertisement.

THE MARTINETTI CHILDREN are open for engagements. See card.

THE TAYLOR FAMILY COMBINATION, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. J. Taylor, burlesque opera and banjo duettists; Little Mattie Taylor, child character-change artist; and Sam Murdy, tamborine soloist and Ethiopian delineator, can be secured through their agents, Harry A. Foster, as per card.

THE JACKLEY FAMILY, acrobats, etc., are now on their way East from San Francisco, Cal., where they have recently been performing. They open in Salt Lake City, Utah, May 24, and can be negotiated with through their agent, R. Rosinsky, who advertises his address in another column.

PROF. J. L. DAVIS, with his educated dogs, commences an engagement at the Grand Opera-house, New York, May 17, and will reopen at the Olympic May 30. In an advertisement in our last issue Mr. Davis was made to say that his dogs were "the only ones that worked solely with voice, and not with a routine." The sentence should have read "without whip or cane."

THE ST. FELIX SPECIALTY TROUPE, at present with Sweet & Thornton's Female Alliance, can be addressed care of this office.

THE ARRIVALS at the Metropolitan, Indianapolis, Ind., on May 10, were Hugh McNanny, the Snow Bros. and their trained dogs, and the Perry Bros. The Lentons opened on the 13th, and are the finest acrobats that ever performed in this city, the kids being the chief attraction. Departures: the Snow Bros., to Detroit; the Lenton Family, to Cleveland; Lizzie Lagrange and Fred Harris, to Louisville. Underlined for 17: The Praeger Family, H. W. Eagan, Jennie Eagan, Josie Farron, the Harrison Sisters, Ella Arnold, Fred W. Knight and Minnie Gray. Letter of May 14.

LOUTIE GRANT, vocalist, is engaged at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia, where she can be addressed.

THE TERRACE THEATRE, Buffalo, N. Y., has been well patronized, considering the counter-attractions. Alice Bateman goes to Pittsburg, Baker and Doyle to Troy, Henshaw and Evans to Albany, Lulu Delmar to Troy. Bernard and Morton and W. C. Turner the caricaturist remain another week. The following are to appear May 17: Miss Angie Schott, Sheridan and Mack and Kitty Allyne.

BUSINESS at the Adelphi, Grand Rapids, Mich., the past week has been good. The new faces May 10 were the Homers, Billy and Minnie, two clever Irish sketch artists. The Stuart Sisters are re-engaged, as is Leonora Creed. E. Hillier is now stage-manager. Addie Brunell, vocalist, opened May 7. Dan Mason closed May 15, going to Indianapolis.....The Metropolitan Company remains the same, with the exception of McVeigh and Kate Montrose, who closed on the 8th, going to Toledo.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

EMERSON'S MINSTRELS are doing a stupendous business in Chicago, Ill., the house being filled to repletion at each performance. There has been almost an entire change of bill, and the enthusiasm continues to foreground heat. In the first part the melodious voices of Fred Walz, W. H. Tilla and J. G. Russell are heard to excellent advantage in the ballads "You Never Miss the Water 'Till the Well Runs Dry," "Will You Come to Meet Me, Darling?" and "Dublin Bay." Emerson and Cotton introduce new jokes and capital repartee, while Billy Cotton's solo consists of several rich and laughable sketches, in which Arlington, Rice, Norcross, Little Mac, Con Murphy and Cotton appear. "Muldoon, the Solid Man," by Emerson, etc. W. H. Surridge has been engaged to appear with the company upon its opening in New York. Frank Bowles and most of the orchestra of the Grand Opera-house have joined the company in Chicago.

KATE LOGAN'S NEW YORK SERENADERS are to perform at Westfield, Mass., May 17, East Hampton 18, Northampton 19, Holyoke 20, Chicopee 21, Ware 22, North Brookfield 24.

FIRE.—The Ripley Opera-house, Rutland, Vt., was totally destroyed by fire on May 15. At about four o'clock in the morning smoke was discovered issuing from the opera-house block on Merchants' row. Flames soon afterwards were seen to issue from the windows of the opera-house, and owing to the height of the building the streams of water from the engines seemed powerless to stay them, and the firemen directed their attention to saving the adjoining buildings. The fire was confined almost entirely to the interior of the opera-house. About half-past five the front wall, down to the second story, fell outward into the street, and a quarter of an hour later the side wall fell, the north wall falling upon an adjoining building and crushing a portion of it to the ground. The opera-house was built and owned by W. Y. Rigby, and cost $70,000. It was two stories high, and built of Milwaukee brick. It was opened in the Fall of 1868. The insurance amounted to $56,000.

THE DE CASTRO TROUPE lay over in St. Louis, Mo., this week, to reorganize for the Summer season.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

"MAIDS OF HONOR," a comedietta by C. L. Kenney, was first acted upon the occasion of the opening of the Mirror — formerly the Holborn — Theatre, London, under Horace Wigan's management, April 24. The scene is at Hampton Court, during the reign of William and Mary, and a certain Rolando Dobbins, owing to a suspicion of a Jacobite plot against the life of Queen Mary, is requested to taste all the dishes prepared for her Majesty, while the maids of honor, to show their loyalty, all set to work to win their respective admirers to the Orange side. But a young lady, Marian Varley, who has sought vainly to become a maid of honor, also revenges herself upon her rivals by making pretended assignations with their cavaliers, and, to their disgust, they ultimately find that she has duped them by making all the appointments with Rolando Dobbins, one of her own admirers. The plot is further complicated by the schemes of Lady Wynterblossom, but comes to an agreeable conclusion, all the maids of honor being glad for their own sakes to admit Miss Varley to their ranks, and that young lady contenting herself with her old flame, Rolando.

THE PRODUCTION of Mr. Gilbert's new farcical comedy "Tom Cobb" (elsewhere described) at the St. James Theatre, the reappearance of J. S. Clarke for a fortnight's season at the Charing-cross, the opening of the Mirror (formerly Holborn) Theatre, the presentation of "Elizabeth," with Mrs. Mary Gladstane as the Queen, at the Standard, and the revival of "Much Ado About Nothing" at the Gaiety, were the most noticeable events in London, Eng., during the week which closed April 30. The various establishments were represented as doing a satisfactory business.....There is a probability that Miss Lydia Thompson and company, who were nightly crowding the Globe with "Blue Beard," will appear in the same burlesque at one of the Parisian theatres during the season.

MISS LYDIA HOWARD, the "fairy actress," had a narrow escape from injury recently. She was riding a pony at New Mills, near Bath, Eng., when, in attempting to catch her hat, blown off by the wind, she fell backwards; the pony started off, and the little lady, whose foot caught in the stirrup, was dragged for some distance, being, however, happily rescued before any serious consequence had ensued by a Master Russell, who, with great presence of mind, ran to her assistance.

MLLE. BETTY RIGL is dancing at the Alhambra Theatre, London.

MME. PASCA has broken her engagement in St. Petersburg, and will shortly reappear in Paris, at the Vaudeville, in a new play called "Fanny Lear."

JOHN BARTON (John Insull), an actor for nearly thirty years a member of the Theatre Royal company, Birmingham, Eng., at which house he took his farewell of the stage a few months ago, died April 24, of rheumatic gout, from which he had long suffered.

MUSICAL.

THE FIRST PERFORMANCE of the new opera "The Macedonian," by Herr Rubinstein the pianist, at the Imperial Opera-house, Berlin, Prussia, seems to have been a great success. The composer was much cheered at the close of the opera. The orchestra saluted him with a triple fanfare, and in the royal box he received from the Emperor the Order of the Red Eagle of the Third Class.

"DER WARWOLF" is the title of a new opera, in three acts, composed by Count Hochberg, to a libretto by Paul Frohberg, which was recently produced in Berlin, Prussia. "The Warwolf" is the famous German legend of a human being transformed into a wolf for some terrible crime, only to be redeemed by a great sacrifice. It had been decreed that on a certain day in each year the human wolf shall be shot unless some considerate Christian will give him shelter. Walther, the hero, has done so, and receives from the brute a magic ring, giving to the possessor the gratification of three wishes. The hero loses this ring, which falls into the hands of a rival bent on carrying off the heroine. But the wolf enters his house, and drags the animal and his rider over a precipice, saving the maiden, and making her and her lover happy. Thus, we see, the story is romantic enough to please even Wagner. Some will call it extravagant; but the composer is positive for his share in the work; and some of the solos are said to be extremely beautiful, while the choral effects are upon a majestic scale.

CECIL CULL, formerly known as Cecil Granville, tenor vocalist, died in Manchester, Eng., April 23, aged 33.

"AIDA," with Miss Minnie Hauck as the heroine, has made a great hit at the National Opera-house, Pesth, Hungary.

PROF. KELLER of Karlsruhe was awarded the first prize for the best design of an act-drop for the new Opera-house at Dresden, Germany.

MME. CHRISTINE NILSSON made her rentree before a London audience at Her Majesty's Opera, Covent Garden, May 4, appearing as the heroine in "Il Talismano," supported by Signor Campanini as Sir Kenneth. Mme. Nilsson was enthusiastically received and her success was great.

VERDI has been nominated, by Marshal de MacMahon, Commander in the Legion of Honor, on the recommendation of the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

THE ALEXANDRA PALACE, Muswell Hill, London, was opened by the Lord Mayor May 1, over forty thousand persons being present, though it rained heavily during the day. The programme for the initial concert, under the leadership of Sir Michael Costa, was as follows:

The orchestra, vocal and instrumental, numbering 1,500: National Anthem, as arranged by the conductor; overture "Etoile du Nord," by the unified bands; a composition by Herr Behrens; Rossini's "Inflammatus," by Titiens and chorus; a romanza ("Deserto in Terra") by Signor Campanini, and Costa's Grand March from "Eli." In the interval between the first and second parts the Coldstream Band, under the direction of Mr. Pred. Godfrey, played the march composed by Sir Michael Costa, and dedicated by him to King Victor Emmanuel. The second portion of the concert comprised, overture ("Gazza Ladra"), quartet ("Ecco quel fiero isamante"), by Titiens, Trebelli-Bettini, Campanini and Behrens; March ("Prophete") by united bands; air, from "Oberon" (D'Arabia sul confini, by Trebelli-Bettini; Finale, "Lorely," by Titiens and chorus; and the stirring prayer, "To Thee, great Lord, o'er all," from "Moses in Egypt," given with the full force of choir and instruments. The Daily News says of the performance:

Every piece was rapturously applauded, and Titiens never used her splendid voice with greater effect than in her rendering of "Inflammatus." The acoustic properties of the hall appear to be excellent; but the wandering about of people outside the barriers created so much noise that it would be wise to reserve a decided opinion. The general judgment, however, was that the intentions of the architect in this matter have been well fulfilled. We can state, from our own experience, that both Titiens and Trebelli-Bettini were heard clearly at the extreme end of the hall, which, it must be remembered, is 336 feet long by 184 feet wide.

Among the chief features of the exhibition is a case of model clocks and watches, which will illustrate the history of timepiece manufacture from the earliest times. The roof of the structure is formed out of the works of an immense four-faced clock, which tells the time of day of
